SHAPING LIVES OF

La Salle Tradition Influences Career of Service

BY MAJ. GEN. WILLIAM F. BURNS, '54

WHEN I LOOK BACK ON MORE THAN HALF A CENTURY, IT IS sometimes difficult to assess what factors most contributed to personal successes—or failures. However, in one segment of my life and career, the positive contribution made by La Salle is not hard to identify.

In 1950, the world and La Salle College were quite different environments from today's more complex age. The Cold War, the Korean War, and the stark realization that the Nuclear Era brought with it additional burdens sobered young freshmen. In that year, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) came to the campus, offering the possibility of an officer's commission upon graduation to young men otherwise liable to the draft. As we progressed in our military and academic studies against the background of the evolving Korean War, what struck me was the confluence of ideas, concepts, and moral acuity between the Military Science Department on the one hand and the remainder of the faculty on the other.

Whether it was "just war" theory, the law of land warfare, or obligations toward our future subordinates, we were inculcated with the necessity for high moral standards and an understanding that we were obligated to identify and accept objective moral truths.

That this came not only from the Christian Brothers and lay faculty but also from our military instructors was impressive. For the next four decades and more of my military and public service, this confluence of standards formed a matrix of support.

As a young field artillery officer, responsibilities were primarily to a small group of subordinates. Later, as a brigade commander, decisions touched on large numbers of soldiers. Later still, as an arms control negotiator, adviser to the President, and head of a federal agency, actions and decisions became crucial to the health and prosperity of our country. In all these instances, however, I was supported by the moral compass provided at La Salle in the early 1950s.

La Salle continues to offer this critical aspect of career formation for its students who are considering a military career. We all recognize that recent events in the war on terrorism have created situations that call for clear moral choices. Not only did La Salle establish clear criteria for making these choices, but it also created an atmosphere in which positive examples abounded. For example, the witness of the Christian Brothers, themselves dedicated to an unselfish life of service to Catholic education, provided a role model for those who would dedicate themselves to service to the security of the nation. Today, that witness continues not only among the Brothers but also among lay faculty who have espoused Lasallian values in the Catholic tradition.

More than 1,000 young men and women have been exposed to these values at La Salle and have later been commissioned as Army officers. Many returned to civilian pursuits; others continued in a military career of service through several regional conflicts and the Cold War. The Lasallian education that helped to form us and later served as a point of reference continues to this day. A revived ROTC program shows great promise. I am convinced that La Salle's leadership today, as it has over the years, recognizes the immeasurable potential for its contribution to the welfare of this nation.

Maj. Gen. Burns held numerous positions in the U.S. Army and the federal government in more than 50 years of service. In 1981, he became the military representative on the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty delegation in Geneva, Switzerland, negotiating what was to become the only U.S.-Soviet treaty that eliminated an entire class of nuclear weapons. Later, he served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Political Military Affairs, and in 1987 President Ronald Reagan named him Director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. He is a former member of La Salle's Board of Trustees.

'AN OPPORTUNITY TO PROVIDE INVALUABLE SERVICE'

BY LIZ VARGO

WITH THE ENACTMENT OF THE POST-9/11 G.I. Bill and the return of thousands of soldiers from assignments around the world, colleges and universities nationwide are expecting increased enrollment from veterans.

According to the Chronicle of Higher Education, the original G.I. Bill of 1944 attracted about 2 million veterans to mostly private and Ivy League institutions and nearly 5 million to vocational or technical schools. Recent data shows that a new generation of veterans is focused on convenience when it comes to choosing a quality education.

"As a Catholic, private institution, we have a lot to offer them," said Lillian Mina, Assistant Director for Program Development and Recruitment at La Salle's Montgomery County Center in Plymouth Meeting, Pa. Mina recently completed a government application directed to the Department of Veterans Affairs to help La Salle communicate with discharged military personnel. Once approved, the University can work with the government on recruitment efforts to show veterans how La Salle can meet their needs.

"This benefits the entire University," Mina said. "What I love about La Salle is that we're willing to look at these avenues."

Steve Downs, Director of the Graduate Programs in Education, and Diane Wieland, R.N., Ph.D., associate professor of nursing, have been investigating several initiatives to publicize La Salle's programs and secure additional funding for veterans to attend a private institution.

"I believe we have an opportunity to provide an invaluable service," Downs said. "You just have to show that you care."

It's that element of care and a commitment to excellence in education that have drawn veterans and enlisted students to La Salle. Senior communication student Ann Marie Gorden appreciated the help she received at La Salle while juggling a college career with her responsibilities as a reservist in the U.S. Coast Guard.

"My professors are very understanding when I have to miss class," Gorden said. "They know what I do and really respect and support what I do."

Senior nursing student Bill Frenette embarked on a similar journey when he changed careers and simultaneously enlisted as a Navy Corpsman within the U.S. Marine Corps. The former businessman enrolled in La Salle's nursing program on the recommendation of several friends who said it was "absolutely outstanding."

For Frenette, La Salle's nursing program redefined the word "commitment." The faculty was fair, willing to help, and accommodating "if you worked for it," he said.

Despite a delicate balance between studies, work, and military service, Gorden and Frenette will graduate this spring having felt truly welcome in the La Salle family. Both knew from an early age that they wanted to serve the country and both appreciated the support from faculty that allowed them to do so.

NEW EDUCATIONAL BENEFITS FOR VETERANS

Starting this summer, veterans who served on active duty after Sept. 10, 2001, will receive educational assistance benefits through the Post-9/11 G.I. Bill.

The original G.I. Bill, officially named the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, was developed in part to assist veterans returning from World War II with education and training. At its peak, nearly 50 percent of college admissions were veterans.

As of Aug. 1, 2009, the new G.I. Bill will offer benefits for training programs including graduate and undergraduate programs, vocational/technical training, and foreign training. Benefits will cover tuition, a monthly housing stipend, and funds for books and supplies, depending on a veteran's length of service.

Eligible veterans could receive paid tuition at a public institution or choose to apply the equivalent amount of funding to tuition at a private institution. If the new legislation does not completely cover tuition, several colleges and universities have the option to provide additional funding through the Yellow Ribbon Program.

The Post-9/11 G.I. Bill will completely cover the cost of classes and programs at a public institution for veterans who served a total of at least 36 months after Sept. 10, 2001. Those who have fewer months of total service will receive a percentage of maximum benefits.

Several additional benefits and stipends apply. For more information, visit www.gibill.va.gov.

Gorden said La Salle offered one-on-one instruction that helped her excel as a public affairs specialist with the Coast Guard. Frenette noted that the combination of his education and military experience helped him become more proactive in the field. "La Salle and the military both enriched my life," he said.

About 30 veterans are currently registered at La Salle, and Associate Registrar Jean Landis said the "buzz" is that institutions should prepare for increased enrollment. The University recently hosted a Webinar, titled "Returning Veterans: Implications for Higher Education," that detailed how institutions can effectively serve veterans. According to Downs, veterans will probably take advantage of the G.I. Bill within the first five years, so enrollment at U.S. universities will likely reflect this trend.

"The history of serving veterans is here," he said. "We have to be able to promote (our programs) and recommend areas veterans will be interested in."

In fact, La Salle's College of Professional and Continuing Studies (CPCS) evolved from the Evening Division—a program designed mostly for soldiers returning from World War II who worked during the day and studied at night. Joseph Ugras, Ph.D., Dean of CPCS, said the convenient and flexible programs, in addition to existing financial and counseling services, make La Salle a welcome place for veterans.

"La Salle has a lot of history with the G.I. Bill," he said. "La Salle is ready to help and veterans can take advantage of the University's products, programs, and services."

Through CPCS and other University programs, veterans can seek degree-completion programs or graduate studies. For added convenience, many programs offer blended courses that combine classroom work with online assignments.

As a psychiatric nurse, Wieland also focuses on increasing awareness of what veterans face when transitioning from the military to college.

Wieland sits on the state-level Educational Subcommittee of Pennsylvania Americans Showing Compassion, Assistance, and Reaching Out with Empathy to Service Members, or PA CARES. The task force provides assistance to veterans and their families. Through PA CARES, Wieland and other committee members have worked with Michael Roszkowski, Ph.D., La Salle's Director of Institutional Research, to launch a survey asking institutions across the Commonwealth how they plan to support veterans. A second survey will address veterans directly about the services and programs they need.

"These veterans and families need our emotional support in the reintegration process," she said. "Many lives have dramatically changed due to exposure to war and repeated deployment."

On-campus counseling is available to all full-time University students, and part-time students can visit the Good Shepherd Community Psychological Center. "Veterans often return to school with more issues than they had before entering the service, particularly those who have experienced a battle zone," said Suzanne Boyll, Ph.D.,

Director of the Student Counseling Center. "Many of these students find difficulty adjusting and can't quite go back into the typical undergraduate care-free attitude. The Student Counseling Center can help to make that adjustment."

Wendy Zazo-Phillips spent eight years in the U.S. Coast Guard and recently enrolled in La Salle's graduate program in Marriage and Family Therapy. The program provides her with an opportunity to research the effects of post-traumatic stress disorder on returning troops.

"It's hard to integrate back into civilian life," Zazo-Phillips said. Even noncombatants have been immersed in military life and must adjust, she said. "It's a lifestyle—a culture. It takes longer to acclimate yourself to civilian life."

Wieland has been weaving these issues into her courses. Last fall, the Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP) welcomed Marsha Four, R.N., Program Director of Homeless Veteran Services, to speak to students. The lecture, "Homeless Veterans: What Nurses Can Do," detailed Four's experiences as a nurse in Vietnam as well as her work with the Philadelphia Veteran Multi-Service and Education Center Inc. and a transitional residence for women veterans in Coatesville, Pa.

"La Salle has a philosophy of looking at vulnerable groups and what we can do to help," Wieland said. "I want the students to have a professional discourse about what's going on related to mental health care of our returning servicemen and women."

Dana Abejo, co-President of SNAP, was alarmed to learn from Four that 30 percent of homeless people are veterans. The lecture compelled Abejo and SNAP's other co-President, Kristin Heigold, to give back to local veterans who "once risked their lives for us." Through SNAP, they coordinated a holiday collection that gathered personal items, such as gloves and hats, for homeless veterans.

"Nurses have come a long way and our roles are forever expanding," Abejo said. "In our careers, we will take the information we have learned from both the La Salle University School of Nursing and Health Sciences and lectures from guest speakers like Marsha Four and continue to be advocates for those who are in need of help."

As a fellow nursing student and reservist, Frenette appreciates that

La Salle has considered programs for veterans that will create a smoother transition between military and college. He has since encouraged other reservists to enroll at La Salle.

"La Salle taught me how to be an outstanding nurse. The Navy taught me discipline you wouldn't learn anywhere but in the military," he said. "If this is your calling, La Salle has always supported me in my endeavors."

AFTER TOURS OF DUTY, A PLACE TO CALL HOME

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

DURING WORLD WAR II, LA SALLE'S ENROLLMENT DWINDLED to fewer than 90 students. Within a year of the end of the war, however, enrollment had surged to 1,215 students, the majority of whom were veterans whose college education was made possible through the G.I. Bill.

Tom Hickey, '48, first enrolled at La Salle in 1941, and he watched as his classmates and even many of his professors were drafted and the campus emptied. Hickey was drafted in late 1942, and by the time he returned from his Army service in India, campus was much changed.

"It was like a new La Salle—and a busy one," Hickey said. "La Salle and the Christian Brothers understood and took care of the G.I.s."

As La Salle prepares for an increased number of veterans arriving on campus, it is fitting to recall the University's long tradition of creating a welcoming environment for those pursuing an education after serving their country.

Even now, veterans remember La Salle faculty and administrators being accommodating to students who were, in many cases, older, married with children, and holding down full- or part-time jobs while in school. A growing demand for evening classes prompted the University to open its Evening Division in September 1946, and veterans continued to constitute a large portion of evening enrollment for the next few decades.

John McCloskey, '48, found La Salle through a newspaper ad shortly after completing his service as a B-17 pilot in the Army Air Corps in 1945. He quickly started an accelerated program at La Salle, taking up to six classes at a time.

"In my public speaking class, there was only one non-veteran," said McCloskey, who remembered budget-conscious former servicemen wearing pieces of their old uniforms to class. "We had to give five-minute speeches, and most of them were about the service. I talked about the means of escape from a B-17 in an emergency."

Both McCloskey and Hickey stayed at La Salle after graduating—McCloskey to manage the bookstore and Hickey to be Alumni Director and Executive Secretary of the La Salle Endowment Foundation. Hickey left in 1955, but McCloskey stayed on for his entire career, as an ROTC instructor, assistant to the president, Vice President for Public Relations, Director of Public Affairs, and Assistant Vice President of Development.

Twenty-five years after McCloskey and Hickey's time as students, a new generation of veterans, most of whom had served in the Vietnam War, returned to campus in the mid-1970s, Chuck Resch, '76, among them. After serving for three years in Korea with the Army during the Vietnam War, maintaining and repairing top-secret crypto equipment, Resch decided to tap into the opportunity to get an education through the G.I. Bill.

He became a full-time day student, studying accounting and criminal justice. At the time, La Salle had a Veterans Counseling Center and a Veterans Club.

When the University received a federal grant to fund veterans outreach programs, Resch was offered the job of Coordinator of Veterans Affairs on campus. Resch oversaw outreach efforts, including recruiting, admission, and financial aid counseling, for the University's 1,500 student-veterans, who accounted for 30 percent of the student body at that time.

Then, as now, veterans needed assistance to understand and be able to take advantage of the benefits available to them.

"These students served our country, and we need to steer them in the right direction," said Resch, who is now involved with similar efforts to reach out to veterans at La Salle and beyond as a member of the Executive Committee of the American Legion in Newtown, Pa. "I have the empathy and the experience to help students along."

McCloskey, Hickey, and Resch all said they and their classmates still feel grateful to La Salle for making their education possible.

"Most everyone looks back happily on the experience, because having a college degree gave them a jump on the future," McCloskey said.

CALLED TO A DUAL DUTY

BY LIZ VARGO

IN 1982, FATHER JOSEPH COFFEY WALKED AWAY FROM La Salle armed with bachelor's degrees in English and French. "I had no idea what I would do with my life," he said.

Nearly 20 years later, he was in Okinawa, Japan, serving as a chaplain for the U.S. Marines. It was a sound foundation of faith, education, and service developed at La Salle that steered him to St. Charles Borromeo Seminary in Wynnewood, Pa., and ultimately led to his calling as a chaplain for the U.S. Navy.

"God works in funny ways," he said.

Growing up as the middle of nine children in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., Fr. Joe was familiar with military life. His father, Bill Coffey, '49, had served in the Medical Corps as a doctor in the U.S. Navy and Fr. Joe said he, too, wanted to serve.

Like his father, he pursued La Salle for a quality Catholic education, where he learned to live a life of service from the Christian Brothers.

"Education is critical, and the Christian Brothers were excellent at teaching our faith," Fr. Joe said. "I tried to uphold this, live it, and preach about it."

His love of faith and service were so strong that he entered the seminary and soon met a chaplain recruiter for the U.S. Air Force. Chaplains were in high demand and Fr. Joe displayed such enthusiasm for the assignment that he thought the recruiter would sign him up then and there. But Fr. Joe had his sights set on the Navy.

A few years after his ordination, Fr. Joe received permission to serve as a chaplain for the U.S. Navy—a position that also covered the Marines and Coast Guard. Soon, he was on assignment with the Marines in Okinawa, with the Navy in Norfolk, Va., with the Coast Guard at boot camp, and most recently with the Marine Corps at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Father Joseph Coffey, '82 (right) celebrates Mass with sailors on board a Navy ship.

Although it may seem that his dual duties oppose each other, Fr. Joe sees no conflict. He quotes Pope John Paul II—who studied underground for the priesthood in Nazi-controlled Poland—as saying that military service is an honorable profession.

"I firmly believe in peace, justice, dignity, and the sanctity of human life," he said. "We continue to pray for peace and offer the sacraments to those in the military."

As a noncombatant under the Geneva Convention, he has traveled the world to pray for peace, celebrate Mass, administer the sacraments, and offer counsel. Wherever the troops go, he follows, marching with them through extreme conditions and living without the comfort of a warm meal. Most importantly, he is by their side to offer guidance when they become troubled by the decisions they must make in times of war.

Despite its hardships, he encourages others to consider the life of service that he has truly come to enjoy.

"There is a terrible shortage of priests," Fr. Joe said. "You really have to love your faith and love the Lord. It's like a calling within a calling."

REVIVING A LA SALLE TRADITION

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

BETWEEN THE 1950S AND THE EARLY 1990S, LA SALLE'S U.S. Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) program produced more than 1,000 commissioned Army officers. The program ended in 1991, but it has been revived through the efforts of La Salle alumni and administrators.

The program currently has eight cadets, who, in addition to taking military science courses that emphasize leadership, ethics, and military skills, participate in 6 a.m. physical training sessions three days a week and complete two field training exercises at Fort Dix, N.J., each semester.

From 1951 until 1965, participation in the two-year ROTC Basic Course was mandatory for all La Salle freshmen and sophomores without prior military service experience. After two years, students could opt to move on to the Advanced Course leading to a commission as an officer. The ROTC participation requirement was dropped in 1969, and the program remained on campus on a voluntary basis until 1991. It now exists as a member of a consortium, based at Drexel University, with other local colleges and universities.

Maj. Gen. William F. Burns, '54, who was a member of the first four-year class of ROTC cadets to be commissioned and who returned to campus as an assistant professor of military science in the early 1960s, told La Salle Magazine in 1991 that the ROTC program had a strong foundation in the University's Lasallian and Catholic values.

"La Salle's spirit helped put things into perspective and helped to answer some of the questions people seem to be tied in knots over today—the ethics of military professionalism, problems of war and peace, and so on," Burns said.

The program continues to be grounded in the same spirit, said Capt. Jason Ranjo, '04, who took command of La Salle's ROTC program in the summer of 2008.

"What students learn at La Salle and from the Christian Brothers—a commitment to service and devotion to something bigger than yourself—prepares them for life in the military, where you have to think big picture," Ranjo said.

Ranjo is working with La Salle's Enrollment Services division to expand the ROTC program by educating prospective students about how a military background can help them to achieve their educational and professional goals.

"The ROTC program provides a choice and an opportunity for a different way for a student to explore interests and get a different level of job preparation," said Brother Joseph Willard, F.S.C., '64, Executive Assistant to the President and the ROTC program's faculty adviser.

The University recently began offering a scholarship in Burns' name that will provide full room and board to ROTC students, who also receive a full-tuition scholarship and a monthly stipend from the U.S. Army. John Dolan, La Salle's Vice President for Enrollment Services, said the Burns Scholarship will not only help interested students financially, but also will remind them of a role model who was once in their shoes.

"General Burns once told me that his Catholic values steered his career more than anything else," Dolan said. "La Salle is interested in turning out leaders with values."

Students also can look to Ranjo for guidance. After graduating from La Salle in 2004 and being commissioned as a second lieutenant, Ranjo was assigned to the 10th Mountain Division. He deployed to Afghanistan in January 2006 as a field artillery platoon leader and spent 16 months in eastern Afghanistan. His platoon not only provided artillery support to infantry units in that area but also delivered humanitarian aid to local communities.

"I can communicate to students the reality of active duty today," said Ranjo, who was discharged from active duty last year and now serves in the New Jersey National Guard while attending Rutgers Law School. "I'm able to relate to them because I've done everything they're going to do for the next eight years."

A MISSION WITH MEANING

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

IN THE 15 YEARS SINCE HE GRADUATED FROM LA SALLE, U.S. ARMY MAJ. DOUGLAS LeVien, '94, has visited and served in more than 25 countries. Throughout his career, and especially during his most recent deployment to Afghanistan, his La Salle education has followed him.

"La Salle's liberal arts curriculum and the Christian Brothers' philosophy of encouraging critical thought and evaluation that teaches 'how to think, rather than what to think' are invaluable learned skill sets," LeVien said. "These skills are essential to the U.S. military's counterinsurgency campaign in Afghanistan."

LeVien, a logistics officer for NATO's Joint Forces Command in the Netherlands, has been in Afghanistan since the fall of 2008, working at the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) headquarters in Kabul. His job has been to coordinate convoy movements and security efforts along Afghanistan's main supply routes to ensure the freedom of movement of security forces and humanitarian organizations throughout the country.

As a result of the efforts of LeVien's team, there was a substantial decrease in insurgent attacks against convoys on Afghanistan's highways in January 2009, and all of the United Nations' World Food Program convoys, including more than 700 trucks carrying enough wheat to feed more than 1 million people for a month, arrived safely at their destinations.

LeVien's work received high praise from his superior officers, who noted his "professionalism, dedication, and passion."

LeVien received his commission as an Army officer through his participation in La Salle's ROTC program, which he said taught him the importance of teamwork and leadership while providing opportunities to build character and confidence.

During a yearlong tour of duty in Iraq that began in 2005, LeVien served with a task force charged with improving speed and security on ground and air routes used to move supplies to military bases throughout Iraq. He also lent his technical expertise to a project that established the NATO-supported Iraqi Training, Education, and Doctrine Center to provide logistical training for Iraqi military forces and civilian contractors. For his work in Iraq, LeVien was awarded the Bronze Star.

LeVien said he sees parallels between the outreach efforts of his alma mater and the efforts that he has been involved in to promote peace in war-torn areas.

"La Salle's example of building and partnering in a caring, respectful, and multicultural community is a value that the U.S. military and NATO's International Security Assistance Force are currently conducting with Afghanistan's national army and police," he said. "Building trust and confidence and overcoming cultural differences improve cooperation and coordination required for a successful future."

Each Friday while deployed in Afghanistan, Maj. Douglas LeVien, '94 (right), enjoyed lunch with local Afghans at a market.

WELCOME HOME BILL FROM VIETNAM

Bill Glanzmann, '74, donated several items from his Vietnam service, including his boots, a certificate, and a welcome-home banner, to the Connelly Library.

LIBRARY COLLECTION BRINGS VIETNAM EXPERIENCE TO LIFE

In addition to the stories of its own student-veterans, La Salle has become home to an extensive collection of items that represent interpretations of the experience of the Vietnam War.

The Connelly Library's special collection "Imaginative Representations of the Vietnam War" is the creation of John Baky, the library's Director, who himself is a Vietnam veteran. In 1982, Baky set out to create a collection that took a unique approach to documenting the war. Instead of historical artifacts, he started to collect novels, art, films, music, comic books, and even board games created during or since the war that demonstrate how that period has been imagined and re-imagined in American culture.

"We wanted to be able to record the expression of the experience of the war," Baky said. "It shows how events get appropriated into the culture."

Over the years, more than 100 scholars have visited the collection and more than a dozen books and doctoral dissertations have been published as a result of those research visits. One researcher came to La Salle at the end of a 15-year project to create a 35-disk compilation of Vietnam-era music, intending to spend one morning with the collection. He discovered so much new material that he stayed for a week.

APPRECIATING HER COUNTRY BY MAKING A COMMITMENT

BY LIZ VARGO

A LOVE OF LEARNING LED CARMEN Superville, '00, M.A. '06, to La Salle University and strengthened her appreciation for educational opportunities in the United States.

Born in Trinidad, Superville moved to the U.S. to live with family in 1989. With an attraction to law enforcement, she pursued a bachelor's degree in criminal justice/sociology from La Salle and considered joining the military. Married to a former soldier from New Jersey and thrilled with her experiences in higher education, Superville was compelled to give something back.

"I wanted to do my part, too," she said.

Superville's undergraduate education gave her a head start on a master's degree in criminal justice at a neighboring school, and she completed the program in half the time. She joined the Army and later became a supply sergeant. However, her passion for education led her back to La Salle, where she entered the Graduate Program in Central/Eastern European Studies.

"I appreciate my education. I loved La Salle so much that I came back," she said.

Completing coursework and military training simultaneously was a challenge, but Superville found guidance at La Salle. A combination of day, evening, and accelerated classes, plus a cache of academic resources at the Connelly Library, helped her studies go smoothly. Even in the midst of active duty, a family emergency, and educational demands, the advisers and faculty at La Salle helped her to complete her degree on time and with honors.

According to Superville, a solid education is key for veterans who are transitioning back into civilian life. She said schools like La Salle "stand out" because of their quality resources, career counseling, challenging curriculum, and personal touch.

"At some places, you just get a grade. (At La Salle) the method in which they make you learn helped me to really understand it and have a love of learning," she said.

Now a second lieutenant in the Army Reserves, Superville is earning her third master's degree at a nearby university and plans to return to active duty. Her hope is that more colleges and universities strive to understand the challenges faced by those who straddle a military career and higher education.

Carmen Superville, '00, M.A. '06

"Most of it is knowing how you look at me and how you treat me," Superville said. "We're at a point in our lives where we should look at service as part of being American. ... The reason I serve is to show how much I love this country."

LA SALLE, MILITARY SERVICE PROVIDE HEAD START

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

SHORTLY AFTER GRADUATING FROM LA SALLE, JOE TRUITT, '86, ENROLLED in officer candidate school for the U.S. Marine Corps. Ten weeks later, he was among 105 newly minted lieutenants (including his La Salle roommate, Mike Provence, '86), out of an initial class of about 250, who had endured the physically and emotionally grueling experience of boot camp.

For the next four years, Truitt, based at Camp Pendleton, Calif., was deployed to locations around Asia. The Marines, he said, brought to fruition the education in leadership and the importance of service to the greater good that began for him as a marketing major at La Salle.

"Not many people just out of college have the opportunity that I did to be 23 years old and have 35 Marines reporting to me. When you bring those skills back to the civilian world, you find that the competition for jobs doesn't seem too stiff," Truitt said. "It really accelerates your career."

Nearly 20 years removed from his experience in the Marines, Truitt has built a successful career in the pharmaceutical and biotechnology industries. He is currently Chief Commercial Officer for Achillion Pharmaceuticals, which is developing new drugs to treat diseases like hepatitis C and HIV. He said he finds connections each day between his current work and the values he learned at La Salle and in the Marines.

"I go to work and do all the things that business leaders do, and I'm able to really help people by working to develop products for unmet critical needs," he said.

In addition to remaining linked to his vast network of Marine connections, Truitt has also remained linked to La Salle, attending events and the School of Business' Executives on Campus program, as well as hiring La Salle students as interns when possible.

"I always try to find a way to bring La Salle into the mix," he said. "I believe in being loyal—to family, University, country."

CARING, LISTENING, SUPPORTING: AN ALUM REACHES OUT TO VETERANS

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

AFTER CLASS ONE DAY IN THE FALL of 2004, one of Ann Marie Donohue's psychology students at Montgomery County Community College told her about his experience of adjusting to life at home and in school after serving in Iraq. That encounter led to a personal and professional realization for Donohue.

"What I learned from him is how profound the experience is to be in combat, how that changes your picture of who you are and of the world and how it creates a distance between yourself and others who have not been through it," said Donohue, who graduated from La Salle in 1971. "I've become committed to seeing what we can do as veterans come home to support their complicated transition from combat to civilian life."

Donohue has since immersed herself in researching the issues returning veterans face and has taken a leading role in helping her school and others in the area to meet the needs of this growing student population.

Donohue's work has led to the creation of a Veterans Support Team at Montgomery County Community College, and she and her colleagues have developed a presentation, which they have shown at other community colleges in the region, that aims to give school personnel insight into what student veterans are experiencing. Donohue, who taught in La Salle's Graduate Program in Clinical-Counseling Psychology for more than 10 years, is also working with staff at La Salle to put her research and experience to work on campus.

While no two veterans are alike in their transition back to civilian life, Donohue has noticed some common threads. She has studied the more severe conditions that veterans can carry back from combat, such as post-traumatic stress disorder and the effects of traumatic brain injury, but, more often, the problems are less apparent. Veterans, she said, have to adapt to making their own decisions again, rather than responding to direct orders. Sleep disorders are common, and even the simple act of walking down a crowded street can cause intense anxiety.

"One of the most dangerous places to be in Iraq is on the road, because you don't know who the enemy is or where an attack is coming from," Donohue said. "You can't turn off that anxiety, and your reaction to it, like a switch."

The goal of her work, Donohue said, is not to speed veterans' transitions, but to help those they encounter during that transitional period to understand their needs.

"Anecdotally, from talking to veterans, I've learned that it takes two to four years before they feel like they fit in again," she said. "During that time, we need to look at how we support the process as they begin to build a life here at home."

EDUCATING THROUGH SERVICE EXPERIENCES

BY LIZ VARGO

WHEN EARL GOLDBERG, ED.D., APRN, B.C., '83, BEGAN working as a psychiatric technician, he knew he had a secure job that allowed him to serve others. What he didn't know was how he would be called to serve as a nurse, teacher, and Army reservist.

A native of Northeast Philadelphia, Goldberg first came to La Salle to earn his Bachelor of Science in Nursing while working at Friends Hospital. He appreciated that the University emphasized adult education, quality faculty, and service to others. It didn't take long until he "accidentally" worked his way into teaching by covering a class for someone at Bucks County Community College.

Around the same time that Goldberg accepted a teaching position at Bucks, he joined the U.S. Army Reserves. "I felt I didn't have to do it, I wanted to do it," he said. "I felt I was doing something for my country."

Goldberg's commitment to the country was quickly tested when he was pulled from his teaching position and called to active duty as a psychiatric evaluation officer during Operation Desert Storm in 1991.

Despite deplorable conditions in the desert, Goldberg and his fellow reservists lived by their desire to serve by helping the citizens of Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. "There were little acts of kindness in wartime that kept you balanced," he said.

It wasn't long after Goldberg's experience in Desert Storm that his nursing career came full circle. While working on his doctoral dissertation, he took a part-time position at La Salle teaching psychiatric nursing.

"The rest fell into place," he said. In 2000, Goldberg became an assistant professor of nursing at La Salle and in 2005 was named associate professor.

Speaking from experience, Goldberg said veterans and enlisted students would be a welcome asset to any program at La Salle. Students with military experience are generally disciplined, confident, motivated, and goal-oriented. They also have personal experience to draw from and share with classmates.

"The (military) supports education quite a bit," he said. "These students understand teamwork and reach out to others."

Looking back, Goldberg recognizes the emphasis both La Salle and the military place on education and service. Those values make the University a welcome place to veterans and enlisted students, he said.

"IN THE LASALLIAN TRADITION, STUDENTS COME HERE FOR ONE-ON-ONE INSTRUCTION."

—EARL GOLDBERG, ED.D., APRN, B.C., '83

"In the Lasallian tradition, students come here for one-on-one instruction," he said. "There are few places that will give you an experienced teacher ... and I think veterans will respond to that."

While many public institutions have become overcrowded, La Salle offers more personal attention, he said. The halls of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences house many years of clinical experience, and many professors completed their training together.

"I've seen some horrific things, but it makes you appreciate life more," he said. "(Students at La Salle) have experienced teachers who know what they're doing and they have a face they can relate to."

First Palopoli Professorship Honors Prushan's Ongoing Scientific Research

BY LIZ VARGO

THE ENTHUSIASM AND CURIOSITY THAT DROVE THE WORK of scientist Frank P. Palopoli will live on through the research of faculty and students at La Salle thanks to a generous endowment developed by his sons.

To recognize their father's revolutionary scientific discoveries and to support La Salle University, brothers Frank C., '69, and John J. Palopoli, M.D., '70, established the Frank P. Palopoli Endowed Professorship. Created to honor La Salle faculty who embrace opportunities for scientific research in education, the inaugural award has been presented to an alumnus on the faculty, Assistant Professor of Chemistry and Biochemistry Michael Prushan, Ph.D., '96.

From an early age, Frank P. Palopoli had a passion for chemistry and a drive to use his skills to help others. His work paid off in 1957 with the development of two breakthrough medicines: MER-29, a cholesterol-lowering treatment that led to the development of other vital drugs, and Clomid, the first FDA-approved fertility drug, which has allowed countless couples to appreciate the joys of parenthood.

"(My father) never really received acclaim for what I consider a significant contribution to the welfare of man," said son Frank C. Palopoli. "We created this professorship at La Salle to encourage professors and students to explore drugs and therapies that benefit man and life."

According to Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of La Salle's School of Arts and Sciences, Prushan was named the first Palopoli Professor for "his strong record of involving students in his research, together with his excellent teaching and service contributions."

"I couldn't be happier with the selection," Frank C. Palopoli said. "His enthusiasm, dedication, and clear rapport with the students were the catalyst. It's nice to have him encouraging young students."

"Any student would want him for a mentor," added John J. Palopoli. "He is precisely what every student needs."

Like Frank P. Palopoli, Prushan is an inquisitive chemist who launched his first experiments as a child with a home-made chemistry set. Since joining La Salle's faculty in 2003, Prushan has sparked scientific curiosity in dozens of students and has helped them to present their research at conferences nationwide. During his acceptance speech, Prushan noted that it is particularly rewarding to see the professorship boost undergraduate research.

"I have seen firsthand that exposing students to research is where learning really takes place," Prushan said. "It is when the student becomes a scientist."

As an inorganic chemist, Prushan has focused on two research areas. The first explores the role of metals in biology and how those metals participate in life. The second component, which builds on the first, investigates how complex systems assemble themselves. According to Prushan, simple materials create an ordered structure on their own, like the "building blocks of life." These self-assembled, organized structures contain countless metal ions that create a molecule-sized magnet with possible storage applications.

"We're exploring two questions with one research line and looking at a process," Prushan said.

During the award ceremony, Prushan said he was honored to meet Frank P. Palopoli. "At 87 years old, he's still in love with science," he said.

The three-year professorship will support Prushan's research-related costs, such as travel to conferences, lab supplies, student stipends, and equipment. Each year, a new faculty member will be named Palopoli Professor as determined by the Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences and chairs of the science departments. Recipients of the award will demonstrate the same values lived by its namesake: the spirit of innovation, intellectual curiosity, passion, and commitment.

"We created this professorship at La Salle to encourage professors and students to explore drugs and therapies that benefit man and life."

WHY WE GIVE: CHARLOTTE W. NEWCOMBE FOUNDATION

ALMOST SINCE ITS INCEPTION in 1979, the Charlotte W. Newcombe Foundation has maintained a strong relationship with La Salle by funding hundreds of scholarships for deserving students.

The Foundation has awarded $634,500 in grants to the University since 1981, most of which has provided Newcombe Scholarships for adult women students at La Salle—a total of 520 scholarships in 28 years. A $61,000 portion of Newcombe grant funds, matched by contributions raised at La Salle, has been placed in a C.W. Newcombe Endowed Fund for future scholarships.

"The Foundation's relationship with La Salle has been mutually respectful, collaborative, and responsive," said Tom Wilfrid, the foundation's Executive Director.

A lifelong Philadelphian, founder Charlotte W. Newcombe inherited stock from her father that grew remarkably by the time of her death. As a proud member of the Presbyterian Church, she divided her funds between the Princeton Theological Seminary and her new scholarship foundation.

Although unable to attend college herself because of a visual disability, Newcombe was a strong believer in higher education and provided funding for children of several friends to attend college. She willed that her scholarships continue through the foundation, and

La Salle became one of about three dozen institutions to benefit from her generosity.

Of the three categories of Newcombe Scholarship opportunities, La Salle receives funding for mature women students.

"The Charlotte W. Newcombe Foundation has a particular interest in groups of students in our society whose financial aid needs for higher education are not being met adequately," Wilfrid said. "Through Newcombe Scholarships for Mature Women Students, the Newcombe Foundation strives to support completion of bachelor's degrees by women age 25 and older who are doing well academically but need financial assistance."

La Salle is one of 16 institutions to receive funding through all 28 years of the foundation's funding history. The foundation funds institutions in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Washington, D.C., that are "particularly good at welcoming and serving mature women students," Wilfrid said.

"Our common goal is to help deserving people earn an education and change their lives," he said. "The foundation's experience is that the University's commitment to serve adult students is realized through its structure, its programs, and the staff with whom we interact."

Last winter, Wilfrid, Program Officer Catherine Thomas, and Program Associate Diane Wilfrid met nine Newcombe Scholarship recipients at La Salle. The women were enthusiastic about their education and grateful for the opportunities provided through the foundation, Tom Wilfrid said.

"We can offer students encouragement and support to do bigger and better things with their lives," Diane Wilfrid added.

One recipient expressed her desire to give back in the future, so that other students could benefit. Stories like this reaffirm the foundation's commitment to the Mature Women Program, Tom Wilfrid said.

"That meeting at La Salle was one of the highlights of the year," he said. "La Salle's Newcombe Scholars tend to have unusually poignant life and family stories, and their motivation to succeed is most impressive."

In addition, La Salle will soon be among the first institutions featured on the Charlotte W. Newcombe Foundation Web site as an institution with exemplary practices for serving mature women students.

Making a Living by Reliving History

BY COLLEEN MULLARKEY, '06

ON JAN. 20, REGINA JONES-BRAKE, '77, AND HER HUSBAND braved the blustery cold along with thousands of others to experience history in the making. They stood yards from the Washington Monument to watch as Barack Obama was sworn in as the first African-American president in U.S. history.

For Jones-Brake, history has never been confined to the pages of a textbook; it's something she lives every day. And the words of President Obama's inaugural address echoed that sentiment. His call to continue the work that former generations started so long ago has defined both her personal and professional lives. It was a mission her parents instilled in her at a young age. A message that professors at La Salle reiterated. And a calling she answered when she joined the National Park Service 32 years ago.

"History is in my blood," said Jones-Brake, whose father earned a Purple Heart for his service with the Navy during World War II and served in the Department of Defense for 35 years. Her family's history in the military actually extends back more than two centuries—to her great-great-grandfather's service in the U.S. 32nd Colored Troops in the Civil War. When she brought a vintage black-and-white photograph of Robert Thomas Sr. in uniform to show-and-tell in grade school, it was the first time many of her classmates had discovered that African Americans served in the Civil War.

Years later, she shared the same photograph with classmates at La Salle, where she enrolled as a history major just two years after the college accepted women as full-time students. She found the History Department's faculty members shared her enthusiasm for the subject and she gained inspiration from two professors in particular—Theopolis Fair and Minna Weinstein. "They let me know that history was not boring, that it was not dead, and that we were living it every day," she said.

During that time, Jones-Brake endured the elements to experience another slice of history. Rain poured in Philadelphia as she and her family watched the Liberty Bell relocate from Independence Hall to its new home in Liberty Bell Pavilion on New Year's Eve 1975–76. The next year she welcomed visitors to that same pavilion after joining the National Park Service. In the last three decades, that summer job has evolved into a career that has allowed Jones-Brake to fuse her love for recreational service with history.

She has worked at national parks throughout the continental U.S. and has worn many hats within the organization. She welcomed about 6,000 visitors each day to the White House during the Reagan administration, commanded a 220-passenger boat on the Gulf Coast in Mississippi, and acted as a mediator for the National Park Service at three Olympic Games.

She now works as a park ranger in management at Assateague Island National Seashore, a 37-mile barrier island that spans Maryland and Virginia. For the past nine years, she has helped to ensure that the park meets its goals of maintaining the natural and cultural environment.

"I love what I'm doing—I don't think I would have excelled in my career if it had not been for history," Jones-Brake said. "It's in my DNA to tell the stories that aren't always highlighted, and every national park has its own untold stories—that's what fascinates me."

From Foundation to Refoundation

BY BROTHER MIGUEL CAMPOS, F.S.C.

FROM THE BEGINNINGS OF THE COMMUNITY OF THE De La Salle Christian Brothers until today, our Assemblies and General Chapters have been understood as the most important expression of "our association for the educational mission" entrusted to us.

The 44th General Chapter that took place in Rome from April to June 2007 was an unprecedented event in the history of those gatherings. This Chapter had been preceded by not only the usual global consultation of all the Brothers, but also of lay Lasallian educators from 80 countries. In the five years prior to the General Chapter, more than 1,000 Lasallian educators had met in local, national, and regional assemblies leading up to the first International Assembly, held in Rome in 2006 with broad representation from 50 countries. The 42 languages among the participants showed clearly the international dimension of the Lasallian world.

These assemblies point toward something "new" all over the Lasallian world. Something is changing. In the process, all Lasallians feel challenged to respond to the urgent new educational needs of our times, reinventing our identity and the purpose of our association for mission. Some structures of the past will be replaced by new structures in which our passionate commitment to education will generate new life.

From its beginning, the Lasallian "association for mission" has expressed its bonds of communion and its work in education as a dynamic process.

Canon J.B. Blain, one of the first biographers of St. John Baptist de La Salle, gives us insight into the Founder's life by speaking of "crossroads" that emerged unexpectedly during the common journey of St. La Salle and his associates [see "Crossroads" sidebar, below].

During each new crossroad, something died and something was born. Their growing identity, personal and corporate, was embraced as a task and a gift as they responded to new situations and educational needs. In the process, they were challenged to remain attentive to an uncertain future.

Through these crossroads, St. La Salle and his companions experienced God calling them to open up to a wider horizon—the salvation of all, particularly those who were marginalized.

This foundational story is not simply one of nostalgic remembrance of the heroic steps of St. La Salle and his Brother Miguel Campos, F.S.C.

Key Crossroads of St. La Salle's Life

From "individual teachers" to "community of the Brothers of the Christian Schools" (1681–1691)

In 1682, St. La Salle and the first teachers moved to Reims, where they became recognized as "Brothers" and established gratuitous schools for the poor. Individual teachers running individual schools emerged into a community of "lay" Brothers with a common educational project.

From the "community of Brothers" to "the Society of the Brothers of the Christian gratuitous schools" (1691–1705)

In 1691, the crossroads was more dramatic, with a decreasing number of Brothers, tensions within the community, opposition from existing educational structures, and, most of all, the issue of hierarchal authority. The Brothers embraced the crisis by consecrating themselves to God together and by association in order to maintain the network of gratuitous schools of their "Society of Christian Schools."

From a "Community and a Society of Brothers" to "Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools" (1705–1719)

Without Church or civil approval, St. La Salle and his Brothers experienced legal entanglements with educational corporations and authority figures. It was imperative for the Brothers to unite in a common spirit and passion for educating the poor. St. La Salle led them to embrace by faith and zeal what they discerned as God's demands. What emerged was a spirituality in the Church for men and women in education to understand and manage the educational project and experience of community.

This feature is the eighth installment in a nine-part series examining St. John Baptist de La Salle, his mission, and its relevance in today's world.

In the Words of the Founder

"Union in a community is a precious gem."

De La Salle

companions. A critical study of the history of the Institute of the Brothers demonstrates that it has not remained uncritically faithful to rigid structures and organizations of the past. It has evolved through numerous periods of transition [see "Transitions" sidebar, below].

Roughly speaking, every 100 years, the Brothers have crossed new thresholds, embracing startling and unexpected crossroads in faith, each time with an undeterred passion for God and for our educational mission.

In this 21st century, the Brothers and all Lasallian educators are approaching a new crossroads that asks new questions regarding the identity and role in a larger association of men and women who share in the Lasallian educational mission.

At the 44th General Chapter gathered in Rome in 2007, Brother Superior General Alvaro Rodríguez Echeverría, F.S.C., successor of St. La Salle, linked our foundation and refoundation stories with the urgent educational needs of today. Drawing inspiration from a passage of the prophet Isaiah, he invites us to enter this new crossroad as a new Exodus:

"Thus says the Lord Who opens a way in the sea and a path in the mighty waters...

Remember not the events of the past, the things of long ago consider not.

See, I am doing something new,

Now it springs forth, do you not perceive it?"

—Br. Miguel Campos, F.S.C., is the Distinguished Professor for Lasallian Mission at La Salle University. Br. Miguel has worked, researched, and conducted seminars all over the world. He had been an associate professor at La Salle University and Associate Director of the International and Multicultural Center. He was also a visiting professor at other Lasallian institutions and at several international centers in Latin America. As former General Councilor of the Christian Brothers in Rome, he was liaison to the Americas.

We invite feedback on this issue and welcome ideas for future installments of the series. Please contact Marian Butcher at butcher@lasalle.edu.

Key Transitions for the Institute of the Christian Brothers

From a "charismatic Institute" led by the Founder to an "approved and institutionalized" religious institute" (1725)

After the death of St. La Salle in 1719, the Bull of Approbation of 1725 became an important transition for the Brothers' understanding of their identity and purpose. At that point, something new was born: a religious congregation in the Church whose members had to assume the responsibility and leadership in defining their dual identity as consecrated lay religious also committed to the ministry of education.

From a "small religious congregation" in pre-Revolutionary France to "unprecedented growth" after the restoration (1804)

After the French Revolution, the Brothers became significant, active agents of education in 19th-century France.

An unprecedented growth of the Institute took place in terms of the number of Brothers, their geographical expansion, and the diversification of their works.

From a harassed "Institute under siege" to an "international religious institute" for the education of the poor (1904)

The early 20th-century secularization laws in France forbidding religious congregations to be involved in education led to the further expansion of the Institute, as thousands of Brothers remained as lay teachers in France, while thousands of others took the road of exile, in order to remain faithful, in their estimation, to their identity and purpose. As a result, the Institute was implanted on all the continents, thus enabling the integration of many races and languages.

Voice of the City

BY GABRIELLA M. SACIDOR, '09

"HELLO, THIS IS DOUG OLIVER..." IT'S 8:45 A.M., AND already Oliver's cell phone is ringing off the hook. Outside his window overlooking Market Street, a new day has begun. As vehicles race around City Hall and the sidewalks begin to fill with a steady stream of commuters, his office is already abuzz with activity.

Seated behind his large wooden desk in a crisp dress shirt and tie, Oliver, M.A. '03, speaks on the phone, which is held to his ear by his right shoulder. At the same time he is typing rapidly with both hands on his computer. Degrees from various universities, including La Salle, hang on his office walls. Photos adorn the office, many of public officials, including Pennsylvania Gov. Ed Rendell. But the one photo that is most precious to Oliver is that of his 5-year-old son. That photo provides his inspiration and motivates him to make Philadelphia a better place for future generations.

A recently added photograph on his wall captures Oliver's role in City Hall; a close-up of his boss, Mayor Michael Nutter, with Oliver standing behind him looking proudly over his shoulder. Oliver is one of Nutter's guiding forces, representing his public image and responding to the various media outlets in the city of Philadelphia. This morning, he has already apologized to local radio station WOGL for the mayor calling in late to their show. He has also given directions to various people who will be meeting with him later. It is now 9 a.m., and the mayor's press secretary is well into his day.

Early on in his life, Doug Oliver realized that he enjoyed working with people and wanted a career in advertising. He recalled his college basketball coach at Lock Haven University offering him this valuable piece of advice: Always place yourself in a position to be successful.

"He always wanted us to think about what position on the court we should be in so we could benefit the team," he said. "I took that literally and applied it to both my professional career and my life."

After graduating from college, Oliver worked for a local Philadelphia advertising agency, Philadelphia Gas Works, and the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare before being appointed Nutter's press secretary in January 2008.

"It is gratifying to think that I am playing a small part in changing the fabric of Philadelphia," he said.

La Salle's graduate program in Professional Communication provided a fundamental foundation for his current job, Oliver said, by teaching him how to relate to people and about the importance of being prepared with research as he represents the mayor.

On this day, as Oliver stands in front of a meeting of the city's public information officers, representatives from various city agencies are seated side by side at three long tables. Members of departments, ranging from the Philadelphia

Police Department to the Office of Emergency Management, have gathered to share their ideas and concerns as well as to understand the new mayor's goals and vision for the future. Oliver fields questions from the audience, and then asks each representative to give a brief update on their agency to familiarize everyone with the programs and issues facing their departments. After a successful meeting, Oliver chats with many of the representatives.

Back at the press office, despite the gloomy weather outside, the mood is sunny and bright. A sense of excitement crackles throughout the air. Despite his heavy workload, Oliver manages to take some time to plan an April Fool's Day joke on Nutter. It's now only lunchtime, but already Doug Oliver has put in a full day of work. During these hectic times, Oliver said he often feels as though he may have bitten off a little more than he can chew.

"But whenever I've felt that way, the best advice I've ever been given is to just keep chewing," he said.

"It is gratifying to think that I am playing a small part in changing the fabric of Philadelphia."

Keeping Up With Yves Mekongo Mbala

BY MICHELLE MARTIN

JUNIOR BASKETBALL PLAYER YVES MEKONGO MBALA is a busy man. While keeping up on his classes in the Integrated Science, Business and Technology program and meeting the demands of a Division I basketball schedule, Mbala manages his busy schedule with skill and grace. His talent, drive, and time-management skills allow him to perform at his peak on the court and in the classroom.

For his classroom achievements, Mbala was recently recognized as an Academic All-American by ESPN The Magazine and the College Sports Information Directors of America (CoSIDA)—the preeminent honor for the true student-athlete. He is one of only 15 Division I players to earn the distinction.

"When we recruited Yves from St. Patrick's (High School in New Jersey), he was academically qualified to go to any school, and it was clear he was an elite student and highly motivated individual," said John Giannini, Ph.D., Head Coach. "Becoming an Academic All-American was a goal that he set with our encouragement and I am extremely proud of this major accomplishment. It is a credit to the values his parents taught him and his tremendous focus on achieving his goals."

"Becoming an Academic All-American was a goal that he set with our encouragement and I am extremely proud of this major accomplishment. It is a credit to the values his parents taught him and his tremendous focus on achieving his goals."

—John Giannini, Ph.D., Head Coach

Earlier this season, Mbala was named to the Academic All-District First Team. Last year he was the only Division I men's basketball player named to the Philadelphia Inquirer Academic All-Area team. He is also an Atlantic 10 Academic All-Conference honoree and was named to last year's National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics National Scholar Athlete Team.

On the court, Mbala started 60 consecutive basketball games—the longest such streak on the team—before sustaining an injury in February. He poured in a career-high 26 points against George Washington on Jan. 28 and was the first player since Steve Smith to score 22 points in a single half.

Mbala's career scoring average of nine points per game puts him on track to score 1,000 career points. He also averages a team-best 6.4 rebounds per game, which ranks him consistently in the top 10 in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

The schedule of such an accomplished student-athlete is intense, a fact made clear by shadowing him for a day. On a recent Wednesday, Mbala's busiest day of the week, he joined friends for breakfast and the Blue and Gold Dining Commons before walking to West Campus for his informatics lab.

He arrived 15 minutes early to class to discuss with his professor what he missed while at the Paradise Jam the prior week. This is typical for Mbala, due to a hectic travel schedule during basketball season. He does his schoolwork on road trips and meets with his professors when he returns to clarify any questions he had while away.

When informatics lab ended, Mbala started his twice-weekly sprint from West Campus to Olney Hall for an 11 a.m. modern British history class. He grabbed a quick nap before returning to Blue and Gold to chat with friends about the prior night's game against Bucknell.

When discussing the dynamics of La Salle's team, Mbala said that the team gets together outside of basketball as well.

After lunch, he headed back to West Campus for a class in regulatory affairs, then went back to his room to rest up before his 5:45 p.m. practice.

That evening, the team was coming off a win over Bucknell and had three days to prepare for a road trip to Hartford. Giannini talked about what they had done right in the Bucknell game and where they could improve. They also talked about the type of offense and defense needed to win at Hartford.

Mbala followed practice with a lifting session. During the season, basketball players complete two lifting sessions a week with the free weights. Strength and Conditioning Coach Brian Bingaman said Mbala "is by far one of the strongest basketball players and one of the hardest workers that we have. He had a good strength base coming out of high school and has gotten much stronger. Yves is also one of the easiest to train."

Mbala's busy day was not quite over. He had a paper due the following Monday for his history class, and he worked until about 1 a.m.

Throughout the day and beyond, Mbala clearly made a strong impression on those with whom he came in contact. In addition to Giannini and his teammates, his professors enjoy having him as a student.

"I have had the pleasure of instructing Yves in six courses to date. At each stage in our curriculum, Yves continues to form strong connections between the new material and foundational concepts he has already mastered," said William Weaver, Ph.D., assistant professor of integrated science, business, and technology. "It is obvious that he has extended his performance on the court into the classroom. The dual application of personal excellence and teamwork, a firm grasp of the basics, and a willingness to practice advanced techniques is what we hope to cultivate in all of our scholar-athletes."

"I'm delighted that Yves is comfortable serving as an excellent role model for his fellow classmates."

La Salle Honors Elmer F. (Bud) Hansen Jr. with Leadership Award

Elmer F. (Bud) Hansen Jr., '58, a La Salle University trustee, has been awarded La Salle's Leadership Award during the University's annual Charter Dinner. The annual award honors an individual who demonstrates outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, governmental, or religious communities that shapes the quality of life in the region.

This year's event was held at the Normandy Farm Hotel and Conference Center in Blue Bell, Pa., a property developed by Hansen's firm, Hansen Properties Inc.

Hansen graduated from La Salle College High School, where he was later inducted into its Hall of Fame. He then earned a bachelor's degree in accounting at La Salle University. After graduating, he founded Hansen Properties, where he is now President and Chief Executive Officer. The firm has developed properties in Florida and Pennsylvania. Many of the properties include golf courses and office buildings that incorporate interior designs by Hansen's wife, Eileen.

Several past winners of the Charter Leadership Award attended this year's celebration. (From left) Daniel J. He has been honored as Developer of Communities of the Year for two of his properties—Commonwealth National Golf Club in Horsham, Pa., and the Ballentines Country Club in South Florida.

A resident of Fort Washington, Pa., Hansen also has received La Salle's

John J. Finley, '24, Award, given to an alumnus who demonstrates outstanding service to the University.

"Bud Hansen's leadership has taken so many forms," said Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, La Salle's President. "His loyalty and contributions to La Salle University, La Salle High School, the Christian Brothers, to a wide range of other Catholic causes, and to his community are impressive and worthy of this special recognition."

Hansen and his wife recently received the Barry Award, given by the American Catholic Historical Society. They have worked together tirelessly for many Catholic causes, including serving as co-chairs of the Catholic Heritage Center, the Ryan Memorial Library Fund at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary, and the St. Ignatius Nursing Home. They are also recipients of the CYO Hall of Fame Award.

[CAMPUS EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT]

A more polished phase of the currently expanding Holroyd Hall greeted faculty, staff, and students at the beginning of the spring semester. The exterior of the renovated structure, featuring the new Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology, is nearly complete and the building is on schedule for a fall 2009 opening. Those leaving Main Campus can now access West Campus by way of the new pedestrian bridge. The bridge and two-story glass atrium at St. Benilde Tower—designed by Urban Engineers of Philadelphia—were unveiled in January and recently received the 2009 Notable Engineering Achievement Award. Several businesses also have been completed and are open to the public at the Shoppes at La Salle, including Beneficial Bank, T-Mobile, Rite Aid Pharmacy, America's Best Contacts and Eyeglasses, and Dunkin' Donuts. Additional stores are slated to open this spring, and Fresh Grocer should be finished over the summer.

Joseph Cicala, Ph.D., '79, La Salle's Dean of Students since 1998, has departed the University to become Vice President of University Life and Student Learning Experiences at Alvernia University in Reading, Pa. Anna Melnyk Allen, '80, M.A. '02, Associate Dean of Students for University Life, will serve as Interim Dean of Students until a new Dean is appointed.

During his tenure, Cicala oversaw the reorganization of the Division of Student Affairs, implemented staff development and recognition and award programs, and developed a statement of shared values, The Affirmation. Provost Richard Nigro, Ph.D., credited Cicala with establishing "a culture that unites Lasallian educational principles and practices with the lessons of contemporary scholarship and practice regarding student learning in higher education."

"If there is a 'greatest accomplishment,' it actually is to be made by one or more of the students with whom we've had the privilege to work, as they live their lives and make our world a better place in fulfillment of the values we've worked to help them shape," Cicala said.

Cicala recalled a time, as the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, were unfolding, when students showed him that these efforts were sinking in with them.

"A group of student leaders came to my office, and they simply and calmly asked, 'How can we help?'" he said. "At that moment, I was certain that we were on the right track in helping students shape and live Lasallian—human—values."

Allen will take over the duties of Dean of Students, overseeing the offices of Community Development, University Life, Counseling and Student Health Services, Administrative Services, and University Ministry and Service. She said her goal as Interim Dean is to carry out the ongoing work of the division as well as to prepare for a smooth transition to new leadership.

"The Division of Student Affairs plays so many roles on campus and has opportunities to touch the lives of students in so many different ways," Allen said. "We are an incredibly unique institution with a special Lasallian heritage. We are obligated to live our mission through and for each other and our students. It's a challenge that I'd like to meet and I'm honored by the chance to try in such a visible way."

La Salle Competes as National Finalist in PwC's Annual Accounting Competition

A team of La Salle University accounting students competed as one of five national finalists in the PricewaterhouseCoopers' annual Extreme Accounting (xACT) Challenge.

The five finalist teams—La Salle University, Hampton University, Louisiana State University, Villanova University, and the University of Illinois, which was named the overall national winner—earned berths in the national finals by first winning xACT competitions on their campuses. The five teams were then selected from a pool of the 42 winning campus teams and awarded $10,000 and an all-expenses-paid trip to New York City in January.

Launched by PricewaterhouseCoopers in 2002, xACT is a case competition that tests the critical thinking, team-building, and presentation skills of hundreds of the best undergraduate accounting students from colleges and universities around the country.

The xACT competition is invitation-only—schools must be invited to participate in the competition by a PricewaterhouseCoopers partner. Jeff Boyle, '88, a partner at PricewaterhouseCoopers, was integral to La Salle receiving its invitation to participate in the competition for the past three years.

"They should be very proud that they were named a national finalist considering La Salle has only been in the competition for three years," said Susan Borkowski, Ph.D., accounting professor and the team's faculty adviser. "There are many schools who have been competing since the xACT's inception who haven't made it this far. I think that speaks volumes about our business curriculum and the students' work ethic."

The final five teams were required to present their case solutions to a real-world accounting issue, which focused on evaluating two financial options for a fictional United States-based energy company, to a panel of PricewaterhouseCoopers national and New York leaders who hosted and judged the competition.

More than 300 students, faculty, staff, alumni, and other service trip supporters attended the auction, and some of the more popular auction items included La Salle banners that once flew over 20th and Olney and a baseball signed by Philadelphia Phillies relief pitcher Ryan Madson.

Working Her Way Up to a World Series Win

Leigh Tobin, '87, graduated from La Salle University.

Philadelphia Phillies All-Star short-stop Jimmy Rollins did not.

But in late January, the two shared an afternoon enriched by Lasallian values that Tobin first learned from her father, Jim McDonald, '58.

"I like it when the guys go somewhere and make a difference, and you see it in the kids' faces," she said, reflecting on her day with Rollins at the Christian Street YMCA in South Philadelphia.

It's days like that one when Tobin, the Phillies' Director of Public Relations and Corporate-Player Liaison, is glad she chose La Salle and has grinded her way up the organization's corporate chain.

"La Salle has provided that foundation for me, especially when you're talking about values, giving back to the community, and caring," she said. "I had it growing up with my family of La Salle supporters."

Tobin started working part time in the Phillies scoreboard room the year she graduated.

The 43-year-old has spent nearly half of her life working in the organization, and she said reaching her "dream job" did not come easy.

"It was a long road, especially early on. You have to pay your dues," she said reminiscing about the gigantic, "awful" copy machine she often frequented to a barrage of flying paper and ink.

La Salle Communication professor Sid Macleod said he always saw the potential in his former student.

"I'm not surprised she reached that dream job. This is a big deal. She had her mind set," he said.

Tobin's rise was similar to her beloved Phillies' run to a World Series title that ended Oct. 29.

Leigh Tobin, '87, Director of Public Relations and Corporate-Player Liaison with the Philadelphia Phillies, and her husband, Eric, who is the Phillies' Director of Event Operations, pose with the 2008 World Series trophy.

"It was quite the whirlwind tour," the mother of two from West Chester, Pa., said, adding that things got a little interesting when her son, Sean, was born in June. "I was back in for the playoff stretch, but so much happened in such a little amount of time. It was such a blur."

University Sports Information Director Kale Beers, '95, said it was flattering to watch that tornado of bliss, as he was solicited by Tobin to volunteer and help with the media during the World Series.

"She's so busy, but she's so on top of everything. I don't know anyone who has nothing but the utmost respect for her," Beers said of Tobin. "It was awesome watching them win the world championship, not just for the players but for all those in the front office who have stuck through those tough times."

Coming off of the world championship season, Tobin said she, her husband, Eric, who is the Phillies' Director of Event Operations, and their co-workers have hardly had an off season. Since going to Florida with the team for spring training, she has set her sights on achieving more.

"My next big thing is a Phillies alumni weekend, and putting a ballot together for who the next wall of fame inductee will be," she said. "I also want to get something like Phillies alumni autograph sessions in the parks and become more involved with community relations."

In Memoriam: Brother William Quaintance, F.S.C., Ph.D., '54, M.A. '55

Brother William J. Quaintance, F.S.C., a former La Salle College teacher and an inventor who received a patent for a device that measured reading speed, died Jan. 21, 2009, at St. Catherine's Infirmary in Philadelphia. He was 77.

Br. Bill earned a bachelor's degree from La Salle in history in 1954 and received a master's degree in theology from La Salle the following year. In 1960, he completed a master's in education from Temple University. He became the first Brother in the Baltimore Province to obtain a doctorate, earning the degree in reading psychology from Temple University in 1968.

In 1976, Br. Bill published a textbook, Learning to Learn. The following year, he patented a timer-calculator that automatically computed a student's reading speed.

At La Salle, he was Director of Reading Development and taught in the Evening Division. He also served as office manager for the Urban Studies Center.

Br. Bill also taught at St. Francis De Sales School for Industrious Boys in Eddington, Pa., La Salle College High School in Wyndmoor, Pa., St. Gabriel's Hall in Audubon, Pa., St. John's College High in Washington, D.C., and Archbishop Carroll High School in Radnor, Pa.

Br. Bill also worked at the Brothers' national office in Washington, D.C., where he was in charge of publications, which included translations of the works of St. John Baptist de La Salle, the founder of the Christian Brothers.

He retired in 1997 and lived at the St. Mutien Christian Brothers Residence on La Salle's campus.

He liked to play bridge and fish, and he did tailoring for his fellow Brothers, sometimes making ecclesiastical vestments and collars.

"From 1950 when we entered the Christian Brothers Novitiate, I came to appreciate Br. Bill's multi-talents: writer, inventor, historian, tailor, fisherman, and his passion for reading," said Brother Charles Gresh, F.S.C., '55, Director of Major Gifts in La Salle's Development Office. "He personifies the religious educator."

Making Connections

TOM KEAGY, PH.D., DEAN OF THE SCHOOL OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

IF THE SCIENCES AT LA SALLE UNIVERSITY WERE TO ADOPT a theme song, the tune might mimic the traditional spiritual "Dem Bones." Its lyrics refer to a passage from the 37th chapter of Ezekiel, recalling how the prophet brought dry bones to life:

*The toe bone's connected to the foot bone,
The foot bone's connected to the leg bone,
The leg bone's connected to the knee bone ...*

This tune is neither suggested because science at La Salle is dry, nor because it needs to be brought back to life—quite the contrary. Rather, the message emphasizes connections, and science at La Salle is all about connections.

The fact that we renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall rather than construct a new building is symbolic of the connections our current science programs maintain with our proud past. It is impossible to understand any of the sciences in isolation; therefore, it is not surprising that a major in any of the traditional science disciplines, such as biology or mathematics, requires study in at least two complementary science disciplines outside the major. It is equally important to emphasize collaboration between the sciences and other disciplines.

Examples abound. Field supervision of future teachers in science is conducted by full-time faculty in the teaching discipline, while an education professor with a graduate science background provides instruction for our elementary-level teacher candidates. A distinctive major in Integrated Science, Business, and Technology provides training in team-building and project management for real-world problems. Our Digital Arts and Multimedia Design program connects computer science to art, music, communication, and English. And our Environmental Sciences program includes economic and public policy issues as well as philosophical and ethical considerations.

In addition, La Salle offers interdisciplinary courses that challenge students to consider the relationship of science to the humanities and social sciences. A team-taught course between biology and religion, titled "Playing God," challenges students to consider the potential power of science and its ethical implications.

Our science disciplines are also connected to the world outside La Salle, from helping inner-city middle school students create their own digital stories, to travel/study courses focused on sustainability and alternative energy options, to serving as the lead institution in a $12.5 million grant from the National Science Foundation that includes 11 other higher education institutions and 46 school districts.

The creation of the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology in Holroyd Hall includes a vision for the future of the sciences at La Salle that transcends the bricks and mortar of our newly renovated and expanded facilities. Picture students researching with faculty on projects that transcend discipline boundaries. Imagine the inspiration of science interacting with art, music, theater, film, and poetry. Consider questions posed between science, public policy, ethics, and the full range of fields touching the meaning of life.

These connections lead to a well-educated student who has the depth to understand a discipline and contribute to its development and the breadth of a liberal arts education. Our goal is to help our students understand the process of scientific thought rather than acquire a set of facts. The proof is in our students' strong records: publication and presentation of research in professional venues, admission to outstanding professional and graduate schools, employment in respected professions, and the ability to lead rewarding and fulfilling lives.

Perhaps now you will agree that at La Salle (feel free to hum along):

Biology is connected to Chemistry, (and Religion, and the neighborhood, and ...)

Chemistry is connected to Geology, (and Political Science, and the region, and ...)

Geology is connected to Mathematics, (and Philosophy, and the world, and ...)

Mathematics is connected to ...

Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, talks with students in the library.

A CATALYST FOR SUCCESS

La Salle Provides the Elements for Innovation

BY COLLEEN MULLARKEY, '06

The expansion of Holroyd Hall may be the buzz around campus, but La Salle started laying a strong foundation in science long before the University began renovating the facility. For years, La Salle's science, technology, and mathematics departments have prepared students for successful careers, which is evident in the work of our alumni highlighted on the following pages.

"One of our missions is to help students realize their goals," said Norbert Belzer, Ph.D., Chair of the Biology Department. "We try to do that by giving them a broad-based education and access to modern equipment so they're not just reading about techniques but actually doing it themselves." This hands-on approach provides students with the real-world experience coveted by future employers, graduate programs, and medical schools.

Situated in a metropolitan hub, the University facilitates countless internship and co-op opportunities for students. For example, working with Keystone Innovation Zones on state-funded projects has opened the door for many majors in the Department of Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT). "It's a win-win situation," said Nancy Jones, Ph.D., Chair of ISBT. "The companies get able-minded interns and the students get an invaluable experience."

Similar collaborations have enabled students to work at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, Fox Chase Cancer Institute, the Camden Aquarium, and GlaxoSmithKline.

"We like to say that everything we do is practical," Jones said. "We have students take positions that range from working in a lab doing cultures to managing a computer system, and everything in between."

Geology majors rely on the region's wealth of natural resources when exploring wind farms in New Jersey and groundwater issues at Wissahickon Creek. "The best way for them to learn is to see it out there—it allows them to get more involved in the process," said Henry Bart, Ph.D., Chair of the Geology, Environmental Science, and Physics Department.

At La Salle, students use several high-powered technological devices to analyze their data. The scanning electron microscope magnifies objects many more times than a regular light beam. Ultracentrifuges spin cells and large molecules

Lighting the Way for Cancer Treatment

BY COLLEEN MULLARKEY, '06

PEOPLE MAY THINK SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH IS confined to beakers and slides, but the work of Naomi Halas, Ph.D., '80, shows how that foundational work can truly change lives. Several years ago, she helped to invent gold nanoshells—nanoparticles that could revolutionize the way cancer is diagnosed and treated.

These small gold-encased glass particles can treat tumors photothermally using light and can induce a very high degree of tumor remission, essentially 100 percent in animal studies.

"My goal in this work is to fundamentally change the way that cancer is treated. By using benign nanoparticles and light, tumors can be eliminated virtually noninvasively and with minimal side effects," Halas said. "This means both increased efficacy and reduction in side effects and should greatly increase the quality of life for patients and their families."

The next step is to combine therapeutics with diagnostics. By targeting specific cancer cells using antibodies, each nanoparticle can hone in on one cancer cell and report its location. That information will hopefully be used to remotely kill the cancer cell with near-infrared light that easily passes through blood and tissue.

Pitfalls come along with triumphs in this type of groundbreaking work, but even the setbacks can have value. "I have had many proud moments when we discover new things, gain new insights, and when things work and work well,"

Naomi Halas, Ph.D., '80 (center), works with students in a lab where she teaches at Rice University in Texas.

Halas said. "Of course, most of the time discoveries and insight happen when experiments don't go the way you thought they would, so failed experiments can be just as exciting as successful ones."

At La Salle, Halas said she learned to work hard and think on her feet. She had a great affinity for her chemistry professors, particularly Thomas Straub, Ph.D., who is now Chair of the Chemistry Department. "He's very comfortable and confident as a scientist, comfortable with what he does and doesn't know," she said. "In that respect, he was and is a truly excellent role model because in science you are always learning and discovering or, as they say at La Salle, 'exploring.'" at several times the force of gravity. PCR machines take a small sample of DNA and amplify or copy it to allow for detailed analysis. "Gaining real-life experience with this equipment is invaluable because it's the same equipment they'll be using when they get jobs in the field," Bart said.

Similarly, technology in ISBT and the Mathematics and Computer Science Department simulate practical situations for students. Mathematical models and programming algorithms mimic real-world patterns of assembly-line control, population growth, or energy management. Virtual control rooms expose students to potential crisis situations at a nuclear power plant without ever leaving campus.

Under the guidance of faculty, students explore various research opportunities and often present their findings at national conferences or in published journal articles. "There's been a major upturn in the amount of research coming from the science departments as well as the number of students involved," said Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences.

Norbert Belzer, Ph.D., Chair of the Biology Department

In biology, students examine how toxic chemicals affect the nervous system or explore tissue regeneration. Next door, chemistry undergrads investigate the role of metals in biology and how complex systems assemble themselves. ISBT students create plugs of bone cement for orthopedic use and examine how to deliver drugs.

"The valuable research skills students learn here can be applied to a variety of disciplines," Belzer said. "The broad outlook our students have enables them to see things differently and tie them together and to see science in a different way as the times change."

Adaptability is key for La Salle's science, technology, and mathematics programs as professors incorporate the use of new technology and applications of science in their classes. "We've taken the first steps toward our vision for the future, and we have great momentum right now," Keagy said. "I expect the future to provide us with deeper and more extensive examples of the type of work you're seeing today."

Geologists Secure Post-9/11 Sites

BY THOMAS W. DURSO

THE PLACE WHERE UNITED AIRLINES Flight 93 crashed after passengers wrestled control of the airplane from terrorists on Sept. 11, 2001, is hallowed ground. John Torrence, '90, helped to keep it that way.

A geologist with Environmental Resources Management (ERM), Torrence oversaw the installation of monitoring wells in Somerset, Pa., after the attacks to ensure that jet fuel had not impacted the groundwater. It was one of the highlights of his career.

"It really instilled a deep sense of patriotism that I carry with me to this day," he said.

Torrence said studying geology at La Salle taught him "how the earth behaves." Knowing how mountains form and how groundwater behaves in certain geological environments directly relates to the environmental contributions he makes.

"When you're cleaning up the earth, people who understand the earth are required," he said.

Today, Torrence is the site manager and site safety officer at the Avtex Fibers Superfund site in Front Royal, Va. ERM and other remedial contractors are rehabilitating the former rayon manufacturing facility into a 165-acre eco-friendly office park, 35 acres of soccer fields, and 240 acres of conservancy park along the Shenandoah River.

Torrence is grateful for the opportunity to do something he loves by improving people's lives and the environment in which they live.

"I feel like I'm making a difference to better the world we live in," he said. "It protects the health and well-being of people who live in the communities that used to have contaminated sites in them, and it opens up opportunities for this land to be recycled and reused."

Fellow geology graduate Martin McDermott, '82, also contributed to post-Sept. 11 recovery efforts. As the Philadelphia district manager for McKinney Drilling Company, he helped to design and construct a drilled shaft foundation support system for an emergency ferry platform. The system reestablished commuter traffic into Manhattan after the subway stations beneath the World Trade Center were destroyed.

Guarding the World's Information at Google

BY LIZ VARGO

MIKE WIACEK, '03, HAS A FAIRLY BROAD customer base. His employer pledges to “organize the world’s information and make it universally accessible and useful.” His job is to protect data distributed to and shared among billions of people.

Since 2006, Wiacek has worked as an information security engineer at Google, the world’s largest Internet search engine.

Originally from Philadelphia, Pa., Wiacek said he has always been excited about computer science “because it allows us to tackle problems people once thought were impossible.” His math and computer science professors at La Salle truly cared about the success of their students, which Wiacek said helped to shape his education.

After graduating from La Salle in 2003, Wiacek moved outside of Washington, D.C. Three years later, he was hired by Google. Today, he lives in Santa Clara, Calif., near the Googleplex in Mountain View, Calif.

At Google, Wiacek develops security tools and performs software code audits. “My job is to keep Google and, more importantly, our users and their data safe and secure,” he said.

Ranked as one of the top places to work, Google’s college campus-like atmosphere, free gourmet food, massage therapists, and fitness facilities attract more than 3,000 job applicants a day.

“However, for me, the most amazing part about working for Google is that it provides an environment where a few people can come up with an idea that can change the world,” he said.

For Wiacek, that world-changing idea assisted the new Commander-in-Chief. Every engineer at Google receives what is known as “20 percent time,” which encourages them to work on any project that interests them. Wiacek and a small team of Google engineers spent their time rewriting an internal application used to vote on questions at company meetings. Eventually, the tool was launched publicly as Google Moderator, and in March, the White House wanted a piece of the action. Wiacek helped to design a Google Moderator page that allowed the world to submit and vote on questions that President Barack Obama would answer during a live news conference.

“What began as a side project for a handful of Googlers helped to make the President of the United States more accessible than ever before,” he said.

McDermott and his team literally worked 24-7 to complete the project in just over a month.

McDermott has also done work much closer to home. He oversaw McKinney Drilling’s work on the expansion of Hayman Hall 10 years ago and invited geology students to study the shafts his team had drilled. He also supervised the firm’s efforts for the addition of renovated Holroyd Hall. It was a chance for McDermott to give back to the place that gave him so much.

“I grew up in the basement of Holroyd Hall. I paid my dues down there,” he said. “Expanding it and bringing in the next generation was absolutely gratifying.”

McDermott credits La Salle for propelling him into a rewarding career. He maintains contact with the geology faculty and often returns to lecture students.

“La Salle genuinely cares about people and wants you to be able to make a difference,” he said. “That has helped me to find success in life and business, because you have to include people as part of your program in a genuine way. It’s not all about me—it’s about the team.”

Redefining La Salle’s Scientific Method

BY LIZ VARGO

SCIENCE IS EVERYWHERE. IT’S NOT DEFINED BY A microscope or beaker, but instead is reinvented every day through the creative ways we think, according to Michael Prushan, Ph.D., Frank P. Palopoli Endowed Professor and associate professor of chemistry and biochemistry.

“We’re trying to help students understand a new approach,” Prushan said. “It’s such a big picture and everyone has a part to play.”

The traditional sense of science is changing, and Prushan is one of four faculty spreading the word. The foursome—which includes Prushan; Stefan Samulewicz, Ph.D., associate professor of biology; Conrad Gleber, Ph.D., Director of and associate professor in the Digital Arts and Multimedia Design (DArt) Program; and Bill Weaver, Ph.D., associate professor in the Department of Integrated Science, Business, and Technology—is focused on a more interdisciplinary view of science for the grand opening of Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology.

“We want to be as inclusive as possible,” Weaver said.

In the past, Weaver recalled non-science students dreading trips to Holroyd. By using a more philosophical approach to science and technology, he hopes the building will become more welcoming to students of other majors.

“Scientists are very creative and artists are very creative. The common denominator is visualization.”

The idea is to create a subculture for Holroyd, Samulewicz said. Future workshops, for example, can teach communication students how to report on the science and technology industry, while DArt students might discover that their artistic creativity is mirrored by the scientific creativity behind a break-through discovery.

“There’s a common denominator that positions our thinking,” Gleber said. Scientific creativity is more convergent, while artistic creativity is divergent—but both are based on intuitive insight, he explained.

“Scientists are very creative and artists are very creative,” Prushan added. “The common denominator is visualization.”

The innovation of scientific thinking is not confined to the walls of a lab. Prushan, Samulewicz, Gleber, and Weaver hope to guide students to a more philosophical approach of creative thinking and develop richer relationships among disciplines.

“This is a new place and a new attitude,” Samulewicz said.

Working to Discover Distant Galaxies

BY LIZ VARGO

LOOKING BACK ON HIS EDUCATION AS A physics major at La Salle, J. Patrick Henry, Ph.D., '69, is thrilled that the University “took a chance” on a boy from a small western Pennsylvania town. In fact, it was his La Salle education that helped the world-renowned cosmologist literally reach for the stars.

Henry has received numerous awards for his work and has been studying the evolution of the universe at the University of Hawaii’s Institute for Astronomy since 1981. Although Philadelphia seems like it’s a universe away, he attributes his successful journey to his time at La Salle.

Born in California and living in Altoona, Pa., Henry was awarded a scholarship from La Salle but was unfamiliar with the University. Its supportive and collegial atmosphere, however, helped him to flourish.

“For a kid like me from a basic school in a small town, it was a good environment to land in,” he said.

After graduating from La Salle, Henry was named a Woodrow Wilson Fellow and earned his Ph.D. from the University of California, Berkeley. He became a physicist at the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge, Mass., was a project scientist working on high-resolution imaging systems for satellites, and also was an associate at Harvard College Observatory.

Today, Henry works for one of the nation’s top astronomy departments. From their observatory on Mauna Kea, a mountain on the Big Island of Hawaii, he studies cosmology using X-ray observations of galaxy clusters, a technique that he developed. This technique is the most effective way to study galaxy clusters, which are the most massive objects in the universe.

For his pioneering work involving X-rays in the study of galaxy cluster physics and cosmology, Henry recently won the American Astronomy Society’s Bruno Rossi Prize. He also has received a Humboldt Senior Researcher Award from the Humboldt Foundation of Germany.

“I’m very grateful. I really do think La Salle took a chance on me and things turned out well,” he said.

FEW MINUTES OFTEN MEANS THE DIFFERENCE between life and death in the intensive care unit. But Lynn Keenan, M.D., '83, has always been up for a challenge. Her relentless passion for medicine runs in the family—Keenan's great-grandmother became one of the first female physicians in the nation in 1878.

Keenan sent her only college application to La Salle because it had a 93 percent acceptance rate to medical school. For the next four years, she paid her way through college as a secretary in the emergency room at Holy Redeemer Hospital in Meadowbrook, Pa.

"I love what I do. I love taking care of people and building relationships with my patients and their families, and I love to keep seeking new challenges."

—Lynn Keenan, M.D., '83

La Salle's small classroom sizes, tight-knit learning community, and accessible professors motivated Keenan.

"There was never any distance—I never felt afraid to approach my professors," she said. "They earnestly wanted you to excel and achieve the goals they set before you." Two Christian Brothers particularly helped the dual biology and religion major realize her goals: Brother Richard Hawley, F.S.C., former Chair of the Biology Department, prepared her for the rigors of medical school, and Brother Joseph Keenan, F.S.C., a professor in the Religion Department, taught her to deal with difficult life-and-death situations.

Maj. Thomas Kentfield, director of La Salle's ROTC program, opened doors for her as well. After Keenan joined the U.S. Army in 1984, he helped her secure a health profession scholarship to pay for her medical degree from Thomas Jefferson University. She became certified in internal, critical care, pulmonary, and sleep medicine.

In her 22 years in the medical field, Keenan has worked at several Army medical centers, major hospitals, and universities. She keeps the lessons of Br. Richard and Br. Joseph close.

"They challenged me to be a good person and a good doctor," she said. "I love what I do. I love taking care of people and building relationships with my patients and their families, and I love to keep seeking new challenges."

Nurturing Real Intellect to Create Artificial Intelligence

WHAT DO MATHEMATICS, PSYCHOLOGY, and robotics have in common? Ask Brian Satterfield, '98, Lead Member of the Engineering Lab at Lockheed Martin in New Jersey.

"People always say, what's your degree in and how did you get it? They look at you weird when you say 'psychology and math,' but it makes sense," he said. "My job is about making robotic intelligence."

As a dual major in mathematics and psychology at La Salle, Satterfield understands the psychological aspect of human nature and can write or change software programs to achieve the same effects in robots. At Lockheed Martin, a large international defense contractor, Satterfield and about 250 coworkers identify promising research from universities that might benefit company projects.

In one well-publicized event known as the Darpa Urban Challenge, Satterfield helped to design a robotic car that obeyed all traffic laws in an urban setting. Lockheed Martin tied for fourth place, as its vehicle complied with speed limits, stopped at traffic lights, and parked without any human intervention.

Twenty years ago, however, Satterfield had no idea he would be programming robots. As a freshman psychology major at La Salle, the college scene wasn't agreeing with him.

"When I went to La Salle, my head wasn't in it. Within a year or so, I nearly flunked out," he said.

Satterfield briefly left La Salle for a job in retail but returned more motivated. He retook some of the math courses he had failed and, ironically, he aced them. His professors suggested taking more advanced courses and combined his interests to focus on artificial intelligence. Satterfield graduated cum laude from La Salle.

When creating high-level algorithm designs, Satterfield said he often reflects on his La Salle education. Now in his 12th year at Lockheed Martin, he recognizes the pivotal role La Salle played in starting his career.

"They prepared me for the real world and let me spread my wings," he said.

IF YOU'VE LOOKED AT SEPTA'S WEB SITE, purchased a souvenir at Disney World, or stumbled upon an interactive experience online, you've seen the handiwork of La Salle graduates Angela Zippi, '03, Glenn Winters, '05, and Ty Burrowbridge, '04.

Through La Salle's Digital Arts and Multimedia Design (DART) program, students develop applications for a world dependent on online communication.

"(The DART program) was very foundation-based. The program gave me the commitment to want to learn more and to have a career in digital design," Zippi said.

Zippi redesigns and updates the SEPTA Web site, which communicates information to more than 4 million users.

"We spend a lot of time researching to see what our users really want," Zippi said. "We have to pay attention to what they're suggesting so we know what we have to offer them."

Understanding the customer is a major part of Winters' job as well. He works for the Walt Disney Corporation in Disney's Theme Park Merchandising division. When a Walt Disney World ride comes to an end, guests are frequently ushered into a themed gift shop. Winters helps develop and design gift shop merchandise that tells the same story as the ride.

"We want (visitors) to take home the same experience," Winters said. "It's always been a dream of mine to work for Disney."

Even though he now works for one of the most famous companies in the world, Winters still recalls his coursework at La Salle.

"We learned that the most important concept in Digital Art is to always find ways to push our artwork to its fullest potential and to see how the project can grow more. Since I've been working with Disney, I've seen how a piece of artwork can always improve," Winters said.

While many alumni work for high-profile companies, others have launched their own businesses. Burrowbridge is co-owner of Well Fed, a design studio that builds interactive Web sites. One site created for a potential skateboard park featured videos of local skateboarders that made viewers feel like part of the team.

"We really wanted the local community to embrace this project and by word of mouth, it spread on its own," he said. "It looks like it's part of a skate video that they made and own."

Burrowbridge attended La Salle because of the DART program and he's glad he made the choice.

"DART helped to get us everything we needed to know to hone our skill set before deciding what to really specialize in," Burrowbridge said.

IN THE SUMMER, STEPHEN RAUSCHER, '73, rides his bike at least 100 miles a week. It's fitting, since he has moved at fast speeds his entire life.

Rauscher worked for chemical giant Rohm and Haas for 35 years before retiring last June. He started working for the company after graduating with a degree in chemistry from La Salle. During his tenure, he managed a manufacturing plant, ran an agricultural chemicals facility, was responsible for acquiring and integrating new firms under the Rohm and Haas umbrella, and was ultimately named a vice president of the company. Along the way, Rauscher and his family lived in Texas, Kentucky, and London, England.

However, they always returned to visit family and friends in his native Philadelphia.

Rauscher has also stayed close to the La Salle family. As a member of the Council of President's Associates and the Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences Advisory Council, he advises school administrators on the best ways to continue La Salle's evolution.

He credits La Salle with helping him launch his career.

"The effort that was required to be successful in the chemistry curriculum at La Salle translated well to being successful in industry," Rauscher said.

The University's liberal arts education helped him as he climbed the corporate ladder.

SCIENTIST WHO HELPED DISCOVER ONE OF THE FEW viruses known to cause cancer continues to teach others because of the research opportunities he had at La Salle.

South Philadelphia native Bernard J. Polesz, M.D., '70, earned his biology degree from La Salle and said he owes many of his successes to the University. His professors provided a strong foundation that allowed Polesz to begin a program at Albert Einstein Hospital in Philadelphia as a senior at La Salle.

Polesz, a University of Pennsylvania medical school graduate, is an accomplished researcher, who, at SUNY Upstate Medical University in Syracuse, N.Y., is a professor of medicine, a director of the regional oncology center, and the Chief of the Division of Hematology/Oncology.

"I always provide research slots, because kids can learn a lot with the opportunity if someone teaches them," he said.

Polesz is a testament to the importance of research opportunities, as he excelled at his chance to work with one of the best.

In the early 1980s, Polesz spent two years working with Robert Gallo, Ph.D., a researcher who co-discovered the virus known as HIV. Before HIV was identified, Polesz and Gallo discovered a leukemia virus, HTLV, which can cause neurological and autoimmune diseases in people.

Polesz said three other species of the virus have been found in Africa and every major developed city in the world. "Thousands and thousands" of people and animals are regularly screened for the virus, he said.

Polesz continues working to develop antibodies for HTLV as well as drugs to halt HIV's central method of growth.

Bernard J. Polesz, M.D., '70

"La Salle has always emphasized people. To be a successful manager, you have to pay attention to people. La Salle introduced me to that side of the business world," Rauscher said.

Rauscher also believes in La Salle's tradition of giving back to the community. He is a board member of the Philadelphia Academies, a program in which businessmen help Philadelphia public high school students prepare for further education or careers.

Rauscher is certainly in the position to offer advice to students and, hopefully, like him, they'll never slow down.

LENORE SIEGLER, '84, CHOSE LA SALLE UNIVERSITY over other universities because it offered a rare opportunity in the 1980s to enroll in a new computer science major.

However, Siegler discovered more at La Salle than the pathway to the high-tech capital of America in Silicon Valley, Calif. She came to realize her Catholic faith—something she treasures every day.

"As a young adult at La Salle, my faith started forming," she said. "I've chosen to raise my kids the same way."

"Now, I work alongside people with degrees from Stanford, Harvard, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. But my La Salle degree gives me an edge."

—Lenore Siegler, '84

For 17 years, Siegler has worked for Oracle Corporation, one of the world's largest software providers. As Director of Product Management for Applications Development, she is a liaison between software engineers and customers, does program management, and develops software that make businesses run.

Siegler attributes her successes to a diverse La Salle education and her first software engineering job in Radnor, Pa., a position that she obtained with her "well-respected" degree.

"Now, I work alongside people with degrees from Stanford, Harvard, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. But my La Salle degree gives me an edge," she said.

La Salle prepared Siegler for her career through full-day software-writing projects in the computer labs. Team projects, group studying, and elective courses in areas like marketing also strengthened her role in the business world.

Outside of working in a 50,000-person company, Siegler lives Lasallian values by volunteering with her husband, Ken, and their two children. She became involved in social and community outreach as a sister of La Salle's Alpha Theta Alpha sorority. The Philadelphia native has also organized alumni events as La Salle's alumni liaison for northern California.

Getting to the Roots of Environmental Issues

BY THOMAS W. DURSO

WHEN SHE WAS A KID, CATHLEEN KENNEDY, '02, teased her mom for telling her that every day was Earth Day. But her mom's dedication made an impression.

"We were recycling before it was cool," she said. "Protecting the environment has always been something important to me."

Kennedy, who switched from a biology major to environmental science, is one of many La Salle alumni working in environmentally related jobs. She works in the air-protection division of the air-quality analysis branch for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"I would never be where I am now without La Salle," said Kennedy, who serves on the University's Young Alumni Committee. "When I realized I could protect the environment for a living, it was a perfect fit."

Another environmentally focused alum oversees efforts by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) to think globally but act locally. Daniel Snowden, '87, manages PennDOT's strategic recycling program. By using recycled materials in highway construction and maintenance projects, the department is reducing what is sent to landfills and is developing new business opportunities across the state.

A geology major at La Salle, Snowden also manages strategic recycling and handles waste-management, water quality, air quality, and resource-conservation issues in the Philadelphia region and north central Pennsylvania.

"I try to identify issues before they become issues," he said.

Snowden, who recently earned a doctoral degree in Curriculum and Instruction from Penn State, hopes to enhance the state's environmental education capacities.

As a dual environmental science and geology major, Patrice Donahue, '05, enjoys spending her days getting her hands dirty. Donahue is a geologic project specialist with Stantec's office in Plymouth Meeting, Pa., where she investigates sites that may be contaminated to determine whether they need remediation. She often takes soil samples and tests groundwater in the field, then examines results and records her findings at her desk.

"I knew I didn't want to sit at a desk every day," she said.

"I get to work on so many different types of projects. My clients are constantly changing, and what they require from me is constantly changing. I like that challenge."

The Business Side of Science

BY LIZ VARGO

LIKE MANY COLLEGE-BOUND STUDENTS, KELLY Eidenshink, '05, found it challenging to pigeonhole herself in one major. At La Salle, however, she discovered the Department of Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT), which incorporated both her love of science and her solid business sense.

"Not many colleges provide an integrated program that allows students to play to more than one of their strengths," she said.

Since graduating from La Salle, she has been a manufacturing associate for both GlaxoSmithKline and Tengion Inc. Eidenshink has helped produce injectable arthritis drugs and human bladders for patients with spinal cord injuries or children with spina bifida.

Currently, as an investigator on the Deviations Management Team at Merck, she supports the manufacturing of sterile liquid vaccines. Eidenshink investigates product deviations and establishes ways to correct them.

The ISBT program provided "a solid science knowledge base and a sound business sense," she said. Each class used real-world examples that helped her to develop leadership skills and a greater understanding of her field.

Today, she offers that real-world experience to current students at La Salle by speaking on topics like stem cell research or discussing career options.

"Every day I apply things that I learned at La Salle," Eidenshink said. "La Salle taught me how to function and operate successfully in the business world, and specifically in the pharmaceutical and biotechnology industries."

WHY I GIVE BACK: SUSAN ALTAMORE CARUSI, ESQ., '82

WHEN LA SALLE TRUSTEE SUSAN Altamore Carusi, Esq., '82, dropped off her stepdaughter, Kelly, as a freshman at the University two years ago, Carusi longed to return to campus.

"I wish I was going here now. It's so nice," she said. Carusi, however, has never strayed far from La Salle. Since earning her bachelor's degree in English in 1982, she has become an involved alumna and generous donor.

Originally from central New Jersey, Carusi was attracted to La Salle because it was in Philadelphia and had an intimate atmosphere. She joined Alpha Theta Alpha and enjoyed on-campus life. "It was a bit of an eye opener, as I met people of different backgrounds," she said. "I enjoyed my time there and it's nice to see how the University continues to improve."

After graduating from La Salle, she earned her MBA from Fordham University and a law degree from Fordham University School of Law. Carusi moved to New York and worked in the corporate financing area with Sequa Capital Corporation, Bank of America, and Debevoise & Plimpton. She later supervised and administered a Teen Court program at Glen Cove City Court in Glen Cove, N.Y., to train local high school students to act as judges, jurors, and attorneys for teenage defendants.

Despite her move to New York, Carusi stayed connected with her friends in Philadelphia.

As she became acquainted with La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, and learned about the progress of the University, she felt compelled to give back.

"La Salle has such a commitment to educating those who might be the first in their family to go to college," she said. "I know what an education did for me and my husband. If anything is going to make a difference in a person's life, it's education."

Although Carusi's grandparents were unable to afford higher education, they stressed the importance of a college degree. Her father was the first in the family to graduate from college and her parents made it a priority to send Carusi and her five siblings to college. Today, Carusi and her husband, Bruce, have made the same opportunity available to Kelly and their three other children—Alison, Jamie, and Sean.

Among the many gifts she has made to La Salle, Carusi recently established two $250,000 endowed scholarships in honor of her grandparents. Recipients of the scholarships are chosen annually on the basis of financial need. This year, two students received the Frances and John Jenich Memorial Scholarship, named for Carusi's maternal grandparents. The Peter and Gladys Altamore

Memorial Scholarship has been named for her paternal grandparents.

The spirit of education and service instilled in Carusi at La Salle also inspired her and her husband, Bruce, to create the Big Guy Foundation—a family foundation that provides academic grants to worthy individuals. These grants have helped college-bound students attend La Salle and other institutions that best suit their lives.

"The mission of La Salle and the Christian Brothers is to educate and to open students' eyes to the world around them—a world of possibilities," Carusi said. "The Big Guy Foundation is an outgrowth of (our) philosophy that education is the key to changing lives."

In addition to her work on La Salle's Board of Trustees, Carusi has attended and helped to coordinate alumni events and reunions. She also regularly promotes La Salle to potential students by holding receptions for interested families at her New York home.

"It's a nice opportunity to talk about the school and what makes it so special," Carusi said. "We all are fortunate enough to have had a wonderful experience at La Salle, and we can make sure that other students have that experience and lifetime opportunity that La Salle affords."

Reinvesting in the Community

BY GREGORY G. HARRARD, '99, M.A. '06

FRED BOSTWICK, 67, WAS YOUNG WHEN PRESIDENT JOHN F. Kennedy became president. But Kennedy's famous "ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country" phrase stuck with him forever.

"I really heard his message," he said.

As a result, Bostwick dedicated himself to a life of community service. He served on several local and state boards, including the Pennsylvania State Board of Social Workers, Marriage and Family Therapists, and Professional Counselors. He recently retired from his position as Associate Director of Community Services for KidZone, an organization that seeks to improve educational opportunities for children in Northwest Philadelphia, and continues to be available as a consultant for KidZone.

Bostwick relates well to students who live in the neighborhoods served by KidZone. After all, he's one of them. Bostwick grew up in Philadelphia and developed a desire to give back to where he came from.

"I didn't have a lot of service then," he said. Bostwick enrolled in La Salle, joined a service fraternity, and took part in a variety of activities that followed the Lasallian tradition.

After graduation and a two-year stint in the Peace Corps, Bostwick started a 35-year career with the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare and eventually became the Director of Community Services for Philadelphia County. He also has served on a variety of boards and advisory committees, including Pathways PA, the United Way of Southeastern Pennsylvania, and the Latino Work Force Development Task Force.

Bostwick began working with KidZone in 2004. He helped to organize KidZone's activities with similar groups and he paired students with adult mentors, who lent their experience to youngsters faced with many questions about life.

And, Bostwick said, it's not just the kids who get something out of the deal.

"Seeing someone progress with the help of a caring adult in their life is just a great thing," Bostwick said. "I think, also, it gives a sense of accomplishment and joy of the little things that happen. Many people are generous with writing checks. But you can't put a value on that time you give to a young person."

Bostwick uses the word retirement loosely, as he continues to devote his time to community service and philanthropic efforts. He enjoyed his time at KidZone and added that the organization is always in need for more mentors. After all, it's a way to give back to the community, just as Bostwick has done his entire life.

Guiding His Patients to Greater Understanding

BY JEREMY ROSEN, '07

IN 1979, FRANCIS MONDIMORE, M.D., '75, WORRIED HOW he'd fare at one of the most prestigious medical schools, alongside about 110 graduates from institutions like Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"You say, 'Oh my God, how am I going to keep up with these guys?'" Mondimore said.

But it didn't take long for him to realize he would be fine, because, he said, the La Salle experience was an "excellent prep for medical school."

"Patients have read and loved his books and have understood much about their illness because of how he wrote about it."

—Geetha Jayaram, Ph.D.

Mondimore is a leader in psychiatric specialties of mood disorders and substance-abuse treatment. He is the head of the Substance Abuse Services Intensive Treatment Unit at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Maryland and is an assistant professor of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine.

The Philadelphia native has published four books on mental-health issues for general audiences. His books Bipolar Disorder: A Guide for Patients and Families and A Natural History of Homosexuality are award-winners and his book on bipolar disorder was one of the first about the diagnosis. He also has authored several chapters and articles for scientific publications.

Geetha Jayaram, Ph.D., a physician adviser for psychiatry at Johns Hopkins and a director of inpatient psychiatry for the inner-city poor, said patients have raved about Mondimore's works.

"Patients have read and loved his books and have understood much about their illness because of how he wrote about it," Jayaram said.

Mondimore said he hadn't really settled on a career path when he entered La Salle. He became a biology major thinking that it would help get him into medical school.

"We had a number of professors who were passionate about science and it turned out to be a very good prep for medical school," he said. "As time went on, it all seemed to fall into place."

During his senior year, he applied to medical schools at the University of Pennsylvania, Pennsylvania State University, and Thomas Jefferson University. He said he applied to Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine thinking nothing would come of it.

"You get accepted into the Medical School at Johns Hopkins and that's it. No other alternatives are possible," Mondimore said.

After four years of medical school, Mondimore completed his residency in psychiatry at Hopkins and became a leader for many.

"Frank was a role model to me and many other residents," said Jeffrey S. Janofsky, M.D., a forensic psychiatrist and a Johns Hopkins associate professor of psychiatry. "Because of him, I'm a psychiatrist. He's done a remarkable job as a treating psychiatrist and a writer explaining the practice to the public."

Mondimore and Janofsky work together at Johns Hopkins Hospital, treating inpatients from Baltimore and all over the world.

Jayaram noted that her colleague has created a success of anything he's done, including taking over the Intensive Treatment Unit. "Revenues went up so much in the past several years, they have had to increase beds," she said.

Discovering the Mission Together

BY BROTHER KEVIN DALMASSE, F.S.C., '81

IN 2006, DELEGATES REPRESENTING every facet of the global Lasallian educational mission gathered in Rome for the first International Assembly for Mission and Association. Participants assessed Lasallian education worldwide and offered recommendations for action.

The convocation was truly unique and historic. Of the nearly 120 delegates, one-third were Brothers and two-thirds were the Brothers' partners in mission. The International Assembly gave significant voice to all called to serve the Lasallian educational mission, Brother and Partner alike, and accomplished it in a manner never before undertaken by any religious congregation in the Church.

The Lasallian educational mission "provides a human and Christian education to the young, especially the poor," according to Rule of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. This mission is fulfilled by the collaborative efforts of the Brothers and their Lasallian Partners—laymen and women, priests, and other religious—who are drawn to and excited by that mission. Brother Miguel Campos, F.S.C., Distinguished Professor for Lasallian Mission at La Salle University, interprets the relationship between the Brothers and their Partners through the story of the disciples' journey on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24: 13-35).

The story is of two disciples who are in despair over the crucifixion of Jesus and confused by reports of his resurrection. They meet a stranger on the road who seems unaware of these recent events. The stranger listens to the disciples and interprets their account through Scriptures and the words of the prophets. When the stranger blesses and breaks bread during dinner, the disciples recognize him as Jesus, whereupon he vanishes. "Were not our hearts burning inside us," they said, "as he talked to us on the road and explained the Scriptures to us?"

The Gospel story creates a beautiful paradigm of the Brothers working in association with their Partners. In Luke's story, one disciple, Cleopas, is named; the other is not. Br. Miguel contends that Cleopas represents the Brothers, who, through historic status in the Church and by virtue of Canon Law, are disciples with a "name." The unnamed disciple symbolizes the Brothers' Partners. It is together that they journey on the road, experience perplexing and uncertain times, and encounter and discover the risen Christ who gives life and meaning to their mission.

The Brothers have long appreciated their companions on the journey. The Second Vatican Council courageously and prophetically fostered this relationship in two ways.

First, new structures allow the Brothers and their lay colleagues to collaborate in decision making. The establishment of District mission councils, in combination with long-standing boards of trustees, illustrates this growing partnership.

Second, Brothers' and Partners' shared responsibility for mission answers the call of the Second Vatican Council

Living St. La Salle's Vision

Anna Allen, '80, M.A. '02

Interim Dean of Students at La Salle University

Lasallian Leadership Institute, 2003-06

A Lasallian lay leader integrates the mission and messages of the Christian Brothers into her everyday work. It is someone who is observant of and challenges the daily activities of the University, the faculty, staff, and students through the unique lens of St. La Salle's vision. The mission is a reminder to recall God's presence in my life and in the students' lives. It's challenging and rewarding to know that we all play a role in our students' growth as people.

Frank Cervone, M.A. '04

Executive Director, Support Center for Child Advocates

Lasallian tradition is rooted in the vision of St. La Salle to live an experience of faith and see, in all, a sign and invitation of the Holy Spirit. This is a way to live our faith through interpersonal activities that religious writers call ministry. God is alive in the world, and we're invited to join that experience, where we find personal fulfillment and spiritual salvation. The Christian Brothers spread the Good News by making the Gospel message accessible. We're changing lives in a local way and taking the message to heart.

Dave Cichowicz, Ph.D.

Director of the Forensic Studies Program and Professor of Biochemistry at La Salle University
Lasallian Leadership Institute, 2006-09

By working with the Christian Brothers, we continue the Lasallian mission and create an atmosphere that makes our education distinct. The Lasallian Leadership Institute created a much clearer understanding of the roots of the Christian Brothers and their philosophy. We learned to "teach always and, if necessary, use words." That speaks to the heart of St. La Salle's mission by the way we conduct ourselves and interact with others.

Invited to Serve

Many educators have become living witnesses of the Gospel by discovering the worth of their mission through the journey and spirituality of St. John Baptist de La Salle. This vocation of education in Lasallian institutions is a mission shared and sustained by Christian Brothers, lay partners, sisters, and priests. We are challenged to reflect the religious and cultural variety and complementarity of those involved in the Lasallian mission. We must renovate, adapt, and create new structures for Brothers and colleagues to assure the vitality of this mission entrusted to us by the Holy Spirit, the Institute of the Brothers, and the Church for the 21st century. (fr. The Acts of the 44th General Chapter, pp. 26, 28).

—Brother Robert Schieler, F.S.C., Ed.D., '72

to prepare the laity for sacred participation in ecclesial life. We have witnessed an increased demand for mission formation programs offered on the international, regional, district, and local levels, programs such as the Lasallian Leadership Institute and the Buttimer Institute of Lasallian Studies.

These formation opportunities—along with participation in school or institutional communities—have given new life to the Lasallian educational mission. The once-fledgling dependence of the laity upon the Brothers is maturing into a “communion” of individuals who are passionate about providing a human and Christian education.

Ongoing formation opportunities should reflect the critical role of the laity in the life of the Church and in the life of the Lasallian world. Who better than the Brothers of the Christian Schools, laymen themselves consecrated to Christ and to the teaching mission of His Church, to offer a guiding hand at this hopeful moment in time?

With the Emmaus story as our inspiration and decades of experience as our guide, our mission is discovered when Brothers and Partners join in discernment and prayer to act upon the pressing needs of those entrusted to our care. We are impelled by St. La Salle's words, “Lord, the work is yours!” This is our deeply held conviction. This is the journey of faith about which we shall excitedly proclaim, “Were not our hearts burning?”

—Br. Kevin Dalmasse, F.S.C., '81, is the Director of Education for the Christian Brothers Conference in Washington, D.C. He also represents the U.S./Toronto Region on International Council for the Lasallian Educational Mission. Over the last 11 years, he has been involved in the planning, development, and implementation of mission formation programs on the provincial and national levels.

Former Chair, Board of Trustees at La Salle University

The Christian Brothers recognize that an affordable, inner-city Catholic education is a huge challenge for the Church. La Salle Academy addresses that challenge, with lay leadership taking on that responsibility. With the Board of Trustees owning this school that serves underprivileged children, the Christian Brothers and lay leaders are having a huge impact on how these students grow to live productive lives.

J. Michael Whitaker, M.D., '72

President, Doylestown Orthopaedic Specialists Founding Trustee of La Salle Academy and Chair of the Trustee Committee

In 2001, I visited La Salle College in Thailand, which educated more than 5,000 poor children. It was then that I understood the universal nature of the Christian Brothers and their call to educate the most vulnerable in society. Shortly after, I joined the development of La Salle Academy in one of the poorest parts of Philadelphia. We have the blessing of the Holy Spirit and continue to work with the guidance of the Christian Brothers to meet the educational needs of the poor.

Deborah Yost, Ph.D.

Professor of Education at La Salle University
Lasallian Leadership Institute, 2006–09

During my Lasallian Leadership Institute (LLI) experience, I learned the power of connectivity. This idea has filtered into my work as I strive to create a community of learners in my classes at La Salle. I help students make meaningful connections between course content and their personal experiences. I also have established relationships with my LLI cohorts from La Salle and other diverse Lasallian ministries. These relationships have taught me that my work is a small but integral part of the greater Lasallian mission.

Gardner Delivers Grimes Lecture, Black Receives Dondero Award

La Salle University welcomed Howard Gardner, the Hobbs Professor of Cognition and Education at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, as the 30th annual Grimes Lecturer and honored James J. Black, Ph.D., '84, with the John P. Dondero Award.

Gardner delivered a lecture titled "The Theory of Multiple Intelligences: Past, Present, and Future." He is well known for his theory of multiple intelligences, which critiques the idea that there is only one human intelligence assessed by standard psychometric methods.

Gardner is an adjunct professor of psychology at Harvard University and an adjunct professor of neurology at the Boston University School of Medicine. As senior director of Harvard Project Zero, he works with a team on the design of performance-based assessments, education for understanding, the use of multiple intelligences to develop more personal education, and interdisciplinary efforts in education.

Among his many awards, Gardner received a MacArthur Prize Fellowship in 1981 and was the first American to receive the University of Louisville's Grawemeyer Award in Education in 1990.

The Grimes Lecture is named for Brother Vincent Grimes, F.S.C., Ph.D., the founder and first Chair of the Psychology Department at La Salle.

The Psychology Department presented the John P. Dondero Award to Black for his exceptional work in the field of psychology. Black graduated from La Salle magna cum laude with a bachelor's degree in psychology, then received his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from the University of Delaware in 1993.

Currently, he is Director of Mental Health at St. Gabriel's System, a Lasallian ministry and agency of Catholic Social Services of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia that serves court adjudicated youth. He has held various positions of leadership within the system over the past 15 years.

[AUTISM CONFERENCE]

Psychiatrist Anthony Rostain, Ph.D., recently spoke during an academic conference on autism titled "ASD: Perspectives on Transitions" that was hosted at La Salle. The University co-sponsored the regional conference with Green Tree Partnerships.

[SPRING DRP EVENTS]

This spring, Daniel Kutner, Consul General of Israel to the mid-Atlantic region, delivered a talk titled "Israel and the Middle East: An Analysis of Challenges and Opportunities" for the Diplomat-in-Residence program (DRP).

Rossi Authors History of La Salle

In anticipation of the University's 150th anniversary in 2013, John Rossi, Ph.D., '58, professor of history, is authoring a book on the comprehensive history of La Salle. The book will include a chronological history of the University from its beginnings in 1863 to the present, along with chapters focused on athletics and cultural life at La Salle.

"I was honored to be asked to write the history of the school," Rossi said. "In effect, I've been on campus since 1950 when I enrolled in the High School." Rossi, who earned his bachelor's degree in history in 1958 and joined the faculty in 1962, said he can appreciate the University from both a teacher's and a student's point of view.

"I really enjoy (La Salle) and believe in it," he said.

The book will take a detailed look at what made the University work. The school survived one crisis after another over the past 150 years. According to Rossi, La Salle expected booming enrollment when it relocated from 1240 N. Broad St. to 20th and Olney, but instead faced the challenges of the 1929 Depression. At another point in 1945, total enrollment at La Salle was only 97 students. It wasn't until after World War II that the University stood on steady ground.

"The Brothers kept this place going through incredible odds," Rossi said. "It's been said that God looks after the drunkards, the children, and the United States of America, and I say, 'La Salle University.'"

The first published history of La Salle by Father Thomas Donaghy ended in 1963, right as the school began an enormous expansion. "That's the period when La Salle became a major educational institution," he said.

The coffee table-style book will be filled with color photos and illustrations and will likely be more than 350 pages.

Rossi said he is enjoying the project and appreciates the additional help from Brother Joseph Grabenstein, F.S.C., University Archivist, and John McCloskey, former Vice President of Public Affairs.

Anyone who would like to contribute information to the book may do so by contacting Jack Rossi through La Salle's History Department at rossi@lasalle.edu.

Starr receives Rousseau Justice Award

La Salle recently awarded Sharon Starr, R.N., MSN '94, with the Brother Scubillion Rousseau Justice Award. Starr is a public health nurse and clinical coordinator at the University's Neighborhood Nursing Center.

The Rousseau committee chose to honor her for "providing exemplary service to communities and vulnerable populations." The award honors University faculty or staff who demonstrate an attitude of respect for the dignity of all people.

"Sharon Starr is the best public health nurse in the U.S.," said Zane Wolf, Ph.D., Dean of La Salle's School of Nursing and Health Sciences. "She cares for communities in a way that respects their choices and humanity. She is energetic, persistent, and creative in all of the community programs with which she has been involved."

Starr believes that public health encompasses the prevention strategies of health promotion, health education, and disease prevention as well as the nursing quality of caring. "I enjoy the nursing of populations, specifically being with vulnerable people, finding their strengths, and moving with them toward their goals," Starr said. "I work with many wonderful individuals who give of their time and effort."

Starr, who lives in Ambler, Pa., has worked at La Salle for 17 years. Prior to coming to La Salle, she worked at an intensive care unit.

Representing Our Nation in the Netherlands

Each morning, Michael Gallagher, '67, climbs on his bicycle and rides through the narrow streets of The Hague, the third-largest city in the Netherlands. He emerges at a square in Lange Voorhoort on which sits his office, the U.S. Embassy.

As a foreign service officer in the Hague since 2007, Gallagher promotes peace and advances the United States' interest in the Netherlands. He began his career as an economic officer, where he promoted U.S. economic and trade interests throughout West Africa. Currently, as Deputy Chief of Mission, he runs the U.S. Embassy and makes diplomacy work.

Gallagher assumed duties of Chargé d'Affaires in January 2009. "From the most junior diplomat to the senior," Gallagher said, "our job is to represent the interests and the people of the U.S."

The Dutch interest in the U.S. is limitless. "I gave four different talks about the first 100 days of the Obama administration and at least 50 election talks," Gallagher said. "There is an enormous amount of interest in President Obama."

Moreover, the Dutch are tremendously interested in World War II and honoring GIs, Gallagher said. "There are memorial celebrations each September. Because this is the 65th anniversary, the 101st Airborne Division Society has convinced U.S. Army General David Patreaus to join them this September," he said.

Gallagher graduated from La Salle with a B.A. in English. Having enrolled in the ROTC program at La Salle, he joined the Army. He married his high school sweetheart, Martha, and was sent to Germany, where he got his first taste of life overseas.

Upon returning home, Gallagher earned his MBA in finance from Temple University in 1973. Outside the university's counseling center, he was handed a brochure for the Foreign Service Test. He passed both the written and oral exams without realizing the competitiveness of the program.

The Gallaghers have four daughters. He thanks his wife, for without her sacrifice, he would not have been able to dedicate his career to international relations.

A Keeper of Historic Treasures

A typical job description does not usually include handling an undershirt worn by a dying Abraham Lincoln. However, James Mundy, '79, the Director of Library and Historical Collections at the Union League, does not have a typical job.

The Union League in Philadelphia was founded in 1862 to support Union efforts during the Civil War. To day, it retains links to the past and Mundy serves as its gatekeeper.

That's how Lincoln's tattered undershirt came into his hands. When Lincoln died, the six soldiers who transported his body to the White House were each rewarded with a piece of his undershirt. One soldier's great-grandson is a member of the Union League and donated the cloth.

The Union League is filled with treasures, such as an original copy of the Emancipation Proclamation and a sword from the Second Battle of Bull Run during the Civil War.

"No two days are ever the same for me," he said. "The intellectual agility of it makes this job so much fun."

Mundy never expected to be an archivist. When he enrolled at La Salle, he wasn't sure what he wanted to do. But he discovered a love of stories past and began studying history.

Mundy attributes his love of history to his mother, an avid reader who collected books about Philadelphia's founding. "My history gene emerged, and I discovered that was the way to go," he said.

His career took off with help from former history professor Joe O'Grady, who started teaching archival management. In 1977, when the class visited the Union League's archives, the League's archivist asked O'Grady for an intern and Mundy's name came up. He was hired before he even graduated.

The rest, as they say, is history.

"It's a fun world to work in. Archivists are underappreciated," Mundy said. "We're the keepers and tellers of history."

President's Report and Honor Roll of Donors

Hundreds of La Salle alumni reunited for Reunion activities on campus and around Philadelphia during a beautiful spring weekend in May. Alumni from the classes of '54, '59, '64, '69, '74, and '79 visited for dinners, parties, campus tours, and fun in Philadelphia.

Alumni kicked off Reunion weekend by cheering on the Phillies at Citizens Bank Park after gathering at McFadden's for a reception.

On Saturday, activities on campus included a campus riding tour as well as tours of the Art Museum and Peale House. Members of the Class of 1959 were invited to attend a garden party at the Peale House with La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, in honor of their 50th anniversary. This year, alumni and longtime faculty members

President's Report

Dear Alumni/ae and Friends of La Salle:

On behalf of our students and the entire La Salle University community, I express my sincere gratitude to all of our benefactors. I hope you will take time to review the Honor Roll of Donors as a way of acknowledging their support. While this report specifically recognizes the generosity of our donors, we are also deeply grateful for the donations of time and service from many of the same individuals and others, led by our dedicated Board of Trustees and Alumni Board of Directors.

Your continued support ensures the long-term growth and success of this University. This is particularly true of this past year, a year of difficult economic times for all of us. Like many colleges and universities, La Salle's endowment suffered with the collapse of the stock market. We instituted a variety of successful measures to end the fiscal year in a positive position. I am grateful to our faculty and administrative staff for their understanding and sacrifices during these trying times.

The economic downturn has had a significant effect on our students and their families. It is important to keep in mind that approximately 40 percent of our students are the first in their families to attend college. In addition, 25 percent of our students are Pell Grant-eligible, making us the second-ranked college in economic diversity among top-ranked schools in U.S. News and World Report. The loss of employment, homes, and health-care benefits often seems to put the dream of a private college education out of reach. The result that we have seen is an unprecedented need for additional financial aid for our students. Your support helps us meet their needs.

Despite budgetary challenges, we completed two major projects in our campus expansion and development initiative this year: The Shoppes at La Salle and the expanded and renovated Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology.

The recent opening of The Fresh Grocer supermarket was the culmination of retail development in The Shoppes at La Salle, the shopping center on campus. Not only is this a convenience for the La Salle community, but it is also a much-needed benefit for our neighbors, as it is the first supermarket in this neighborhood for more than 40 years.

We remain dedicated to excellence in teaching and learning, personal attention, a sense of community, and a global perspective.

The development of The Shoppes at La Salle has been a collaborative effort with neighbors, community leaders, and elected officials. By working together, we are strengthening our community, making it a better place to live, work, and study. Making a positive impact on our neighborhood was a major goal in our 2003 Strategic Plan, and it continues to be one of our strategic initiatives in The Will to Excel, our 2008 Strategic Plan.

The dedication and opening of the new Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology, for the beginning of the 2009-2010 academic year has brought joy and excitement to the campus community. The beautifully designed, well-equipped, and environmentally friendly Holroyd Hall has become an inspiration and magnet for a range of faculty- and student-led interdisciplinary programs.

This project would not have gotten off the ground without the desire and foresight of Hugh Devlin, '64, who chaired the Shoulder to Shoulder fundraising initiative that raised more than $28 million. Cutting the ribbon at the opening ceremony in September in the company of Hugh, Nancy, and the rest of the Devlin family stands out among many proud moments as President of La Salle.

The project was also the result of the educational vision and commitment of the academic leadership and the science and technology faculty, whose experience and collective wisdom informed the planning of this wonderful facility. Its completion required the skill and hard work of our business and facilities departments to coordinate and execute a complex task on budget and on deadline. It is truly a University-wide achievement.

Another University-wide achievement is our new Strategic Plan, The Will to Excel, which was approved last fall by the Board of Trustees. We have begun to carry out the initiatives through the President's Team in conjunction with our Planning Advisory Board. I encourage you to read the following report, which has been organized according to the six strategic priorities of the plan.

As a preface to the report, the two-page spread that immediately follows this letter is a retrospective of highlights of the last 10 years at La Salle. I think that you will agree that we have come a long way.

Yet, whenever I think about how La Salle has changed, I am still cognizant of how La Salle has remained the same. We continue to be inspired by St. John Baptist de La Salle, the founder of the Christian Brothers and patron saint of teachers. We continue to be shaped by Catholic and Lasallian values. We remain dedicated to excellence in teaching and learning, personal attention, a sense of community, and a global perspective.

In closing, I remain grateful for your kind and generous support and ask for your continued partnership as we work together to advance the mission of our University.

Sincerely yours,

Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., '70

OUR NEW STRATEGIC PLAN, THE WILL TO EXCEL, HAS SIX strategic priorities. Here is a description of those priorities and some highlights of activities.

Integrating Mission

The University will continue to be inspired by the life of St. John Baptist de La Salle and will understand the full nature of his work and legacy. We will engage the community in the development of structures that will advance the University's Lasallian and Catholic heritage, enabling students to explore the connections between faith and life and demonstrate their commitment to service to others.

One structure that has been developed to support this priority is the establishment of a Mission Advisory Group. In addition, the Office of Mission Integration has published the second edition of its "Blue Book," a handbook that is distributed to incoming freshmen. The book provides an introduction to Lasallian history and values and is designed to help new students understand the culture of the University.

The Office of Mission Integration has taken a leadership role in transforming what was known as Charter Week, which has been an annual celebration of La Salle's founding, into Heritage Week, which expands the perspective of the events to include the legacy of St. La Salle and how that legacy remains alive today.

In partnership with the academic area, the Office of Mission Integration has supported "The Essential Question," an economic justice project for incoming freshmen, and the Social Justice Week program.

Creating Academic Distinctiveness and Student Success

The University will ensure that students have the opportunity to achieve academic success by providing them with professors who are committed to excellence in teaching and learning, an engaging learning environment, a focus on community as the central means by which learning occurs, and a curriculum that is not only creative, innovative, and practical, but is one that also integrates the Lasallian tradition and Catholic social teaching where possible.

We tell our students that we will challenge them academically, but we will also support them. This is evidenced by our commitment to student support services, which includes significant research, more workshops, course-embedded tutors, and parent contact. In addition, the freshman writing program has been revised for the fall 2009 semester.

The academic area has launched several programs designed to supplement the curriculum and integrate the Lasallian tradition and Catholic social teaching. These include "The Essential Question" and Social Justice Week. Further, the fall semester marked the debut of the Philadelphia Center, an on-campus resource for students and faculty designed to maximize the integration of the city's opportunities for curricular and extracurricular uses.

In our planning process, we have identified several academic areas of focus. A blue-ribbon committee for our School of Business has been named and has begun meeting.

THE EXPLORER CONNECTION

The Essential Question

This group is composed of University administrators and faculty along with interested alumni. Their analysis and recommendations will help to guide planning for the school's future.

Other academic areas with strong potential for growth are nursing, teacher education, communication, criminal justice and pre-law, and biology.

Managing Enrollment

The University will gain more control over our future by developing the capacity to achieve enrollment goals through improved marketing and recruiting strategies, improved retention and graduation rates, campus-wide branding initiatives, and strategic development of new academic programs.

One of our goals in this area is to increase our undergraduate student enrollment, and we took a major step forward this academic year when we welcomed our largest freshman class in 29 years. We attribute some of this success to an integrated marketing and branding approach that focuses on delivering accurate, clear, and consistent messages about what makes La Salle distinctive and desirable. An organized branding initiative over the last year and a half has provided a platform for both our written and verbal communications.

A new concept for undergraduate admission, the Lasallian Interview, has been tested this fall in a pilot program.

Prospective students interested in early admission have had an opportunity to take part in an on-campus interview with a team composed of faculty or administrative staff and alumni volunteers.

The idea is to communicate clearly to the prospective student what La Salle stands for and, based on the student's responses, determine if he or she is a good fit for La Salle. Such a process is also expected to lead to higher rates of retention.

Another goal is to increase our enrollment in graduate programs, as well as in programs offered through our College of Professional and Continuing Studies.

Among the new programs now being offered are post-baccalaureate certificates in autism through our Graduate Education program and in translation through our Hispanic Institute.

Beginning next academic year, our School of Nursing and Health Sciences will offer a Doctor of Nursing Practice degree program, a much-needed program in the nursing field.

In the last two years, we have made investments in personnel and technology in order to expand our online program offerings, and we continue to grow in this area.

We will ... advance
the University's Lasallian and Catholic heritage, enabling students to explore the connections between faith and life.

Impacting Our Neighborhood

The University will enhance its visibility and presence among all sectors of our local community by creating and promoting our competitive advantages. We will be recognized among all regional constituencies as a readily accessible, high-quality, and responsive resource vital to the economic, social, and cultural growth of Philadelphia.

The Shoppes at La Salle project is certainly the most visible sign of our positive impact on our neighborhood. The opening of The Fresh Grocer supermarket in August capped off the shopping center's development. Our other partners are Beneficial Bank, Rite Aid, Dunkin' Donuts, America's Best Eyewear, GameStop, and T-Mobile. The collaboration that made this project successful has laid a foundation of relationships of individuals and institutions that have the betterment of the neighborhood as a common goal.

Additionally, the University acquired and donated a severely blighted neighborhood property to Habitat for Humanity for rehabilitation and conversion to a single-family home. The La Salle University community, including our alumni, will be among the volunteers working on the project.

Through the University's William Penn Foundation grant, an external advisory group of community leaders and stakeholders was established to assist the University in understanding community issues and identifying potential solutions through a series of informational meetings, which resulted in the establishment of community-prioritized concerns.

Building on these kinds of initiatives, our community relations program has intensified its efforts to explore other opportunities and community partnerships related to housing, safety, and commercial ventures.

One aspect of our relationship with our neighborhood is our long-established commitment to community service. From our Neighbor to Neighbor program, sponsored by University Ministry and Service, to our Athletics Department's Project Teamwork initiatives with nearby Logan Elementary School, including a recent expansion of our involvement with the Big Brother Big Sister program, La Salle students, faculty, staff, and alumni continue to volunteer in our community.

In fact, for the third year in a row, the Corporation for National and Community Service honored La Salle with a place on the President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll for its commitment to service in the community and around the nation.

The Shoppes
at La Salle project is certainly the most visible sign of our positive impact on our neighborhood.

Optimizing Our Human Resources

The University will use proactive, creative approaches to hiring, developing, rewarding, and utilizing our employees, recognizing that dedicated and highly skilled faculty and staff are essential to achieving our vision.

A major goal for La Salle is to continue to attract and retain excellent faculty and staff. Not only is it important that new employees be qualified, but that they also share the mission of the University. This concept is stressed in our employee recruitment communications and in the interview process. Another step taken this past year to reinforce this model was the collaboration of our Human Resources Department with the Special Assistant to the President for Mission Integration to update and incorporate the University's core values into the new employee orientation program.

Because of the value that we place on the role of our alumni in the life of the University, we have always considered alumni as a vital human resource. Accordingly, we continually seek to engage an increasing number of alumni in a variety of ways, including leadership of alumni clubs and chapters, guest speakers, career mentors, community service partners, and much more.

Last year, at the request of La Salle's Enrollment Services area, the Alumni Board of Directors and other alumni volunteers greatly enhanced their participation in the undergraduate admissions process by volunteering at 47 college fairs, attending open houses for prospective students and their families, and participating in Day One programs for admitted students, as well as writing letters to accepted students.

Maximizing Resources and Enhancing Institutional Capacity for Success

The University will increase our competitive advantage, respond effectively to community needs, and enhance teaching and learning excellence by acquiring and effectively utilizing the essential fiscal and physical resources to adequately support the implementation of our strategic priorities, goals, and objectives.

Last year's national financial crisis proved to be a serious test of the University's ability to manage our fiscal and physical resources. The University met the related challenges by developing a budget management plan that included a freeze on positions, cutbacks on overtime and discretionary spending, and other efficiencies.

Many of the initiatives spurred by the economic downturn of last year will now be made permanent. Savings in the areas of printing and postage by substitution of electronic communications, for example, were accomplished through conversions of many alumni communications, parking permit applications, the University's Campus News publication, invitations to events, and the School of Arts and Sciences Explorer newsletter, to name a few.

The saving on printing—and therefore paper—has, of course, the additional benefit of helping the environment, which is one of our strategic goals. Among our other environmentally friendly initiatives are increased recycling and the green roof on the newly renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology.

Last year, investments in our physical plant, necessary to maintain a competitive advantage, included construction of a new practice field for the women's softball team, the renovations of the St. Bernard Residence Hall lounge and the Undergraduate Admission offices, and the installation of air conditioning in the St. Katherine Residence Hall and the Medical Office Building on West Campus.

Our acquisition of West Campus, the former Germantown Hospital property, has enabled the University to make progress on our strategic initiative to diversify our revenue streams. Medical office leases and additional paid parking spaces have contributed to revenues, as has the first University-owned restaurant opened to the public—Elements Café, in St. Benilde Tower.

Of course, a key to acquiring the fiscal resources necessary to enable the University to be successful is the ability to attract philanthropic support. In difficult economic times, last year's results were remarkable.

Giving to the University totaled $9.5 million (cash-in) last year, and the unrestricted Annual Fund exceeded its goal of $2.1 million, making last fiscal year one of the most successful of the last 20 years.

As we look back on 2008–2009, I believe that we have not only accomplished much in the face of adversity, but that we have also made our strategic foundation stronger because of the challenges we had to overcome.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS DELIVERED BY GRADUATE DOUG PHELAN

When Doug Phelan, '09, volunteered during La Salle's Commencement exercises at the end of his freshman year, he was impressed by the touching words of the student speaker. For three years, he hoped to fulfill La Salle's Commencement tradition by taking on that role at his own graduation.

The biology major had the honor of delivering the Commencement address to his fellow classmates during La Salle's 2009 Commencement ceremony. Phelan's speech discussed the Lasallian journey: "Where we were when we came into La Salle, what we did here, and where we will be going."

Outside the classroom, Phelan was involved with the University's theater troupe, The Masque, where he starred in and produced plays. He was also in the jazz and pep bands and sang with a choir that performed at the University's chapel.

Phelan now attends the Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine.

[COMMENCEMENT IN PRAGUE, CZECH REPUBLIC]

Brother Gerry Molyneux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, Director of International Programs for the Communication Department, third from right, and Todd Nesbitt, Coordinator of the Professional Communication and Public Relations Program for University of New York in Prague, third from left, celebrate graduation with students in Prague, Czech Republic. Twenty-one students graduated from the Professional Communication and Public Relations program on June 30, 2009.

La Salle Bestows Honorary Degree on O'Brien

G. Dennis O'Brien, Ph.D., a longtime trustee at La Salle and President Emeritus of the University of Rochester, received an honorary degree from La Salle during the 2009 Commencement ceremony.

O'Brien is a recognized scholar on higher education accreditation. He led the University of Rochester for a decade as its eighth president before retiring in 1994.

Prior to his tenure at Rochester, O'Brien served as President of Bucknell University, Dean of Middlebury College, and Assistant Dean of Princeton University. His teaching career began at the University of Chicago, where he received a Carnegie Research Fellowship in University Teaching in 1957. Since then, he has taught at six other institutions, including La Salle. He was a professor of philosophy for nearly 25 years.

In 1952, O'Brien graduated cum laude with a Bachelor of Arts in English from Yale. He earned a Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Chicago in 1961. In addition to the Carnegie Research Fellowship, he received a fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies and Phi Beta Kappa from Yale.

O'Brien has published five books, written countless articles, and delivered numerous lectures on wide-ranging aspects of philosophy, religion, education, and modern art.

He has chaired 17 school evaluation visits for the Middle States and New England accrediting associations and has served on numerous civic boards, including Chase Lincoln First National Bank, the Rochester Area Chamber of Commerce, and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. He has received honorary degrees from six universities.

University President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, said, "We are particularly grateful for Dr. O'Brien's service on the Board of Trustees, where he has brought exceptional wisdom and a lively wit. Since 1969, he has been a valued adviser to five La Salle presidents."

La Salle Recognizes Smith for Distinguished Teaching

Provost Richard Nigro, Ph.D., and Stephen Smith

Stephen Smith, who has been an English professor at La Salle for 22 years, said he was overjoyed to learn he would receive the University's Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching.

"There are so many things I love about teaching," Smith said. "I gain a great deal of satisfaction from teaching and having an effect on young peoples' lives—watching them mature and grow."

Originally from Northeast Philadelphia, Smith earned a bachelor's degree from St. Joseph's University and his master's and doctoral degrees from the University of Notre Dame. He taught at Idaho State University for nine years, then returned home and began teaching at La Salle in 1987.

Provost Richard Nigro, Ph.D., who presented the award to Smith at Commencement, said students nominated Smith because he brings literature to life and offers some of the best courses.

"A colleague and previous Lindback winner, the late professor John Keenan, wrote several years ago that this year's winner is 'My impression of what a La Salle teacher should be,'" Nigro said.

In addition to his work at La Salle, Smith and his wife, Mimi, co-founded the Amaryllis Theatre Co. The professional theater company stages productions in Philadelphia and has a mission to be accessible to all people and inclusive of all actors, including those with disabilities.

Moore Joins La Salle as New VP for Student Affairs

La Salle has welcomed James E. Moore, Ph.D., as the University's newly appointed Vice President for Student Affairs/Dean of Students.

Moore joined La Salle after serving as a senior administrator in student affairs positions at several colleges and universities in the Midwest. At La Salle, he oversees the offices of Community Development, University Life, Counseling and Student Health Services, Administrative Services, and University Ministry and Service.

"I am delighted at the opportunity to join La Salle University," Moore said. "I look forward to developing positive relationships with all members of the campus community who so fully embody the values of the Christian Brothers."

Most recently, Moore served as Vice President for Student Affairs and Campus Planning at Marian University in Fond Du Lac, Wis. Since 2007, he was the executive officer for all areas of Marian's student life and campus planning. One of his accomplishments at the university involved negotiating an energy partnership with a local utility provider to fund more than $1.25 million in energy conservation, safety, and deferred management projects.

Prior to his position at Marian, Moore held senior leadership positions involving student affairs at Benedictine College in Kansas, Creighton University in Nebraska, Marquette University in Wisconsin, and Iowa State University. He also represented the Higher Learning Commission as a team Chair and team member for 18 years in the Midwest regional accreditation organization.

"I am excited to have Jim join the La Salle University community, not only because he brings a wealth of student affairs experience to the position, but also because his broad familiarity with Catholic higher education is an excellent fit with our strategic initiative to deepen the integration of our Lasallian mission into student life," said President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70.

Moore earned his bachelor's degree in history from the University of California, Santa Barbara, his master's degree in student personnel work in higher education from The Ohio State University, and his Ph.D. in higher education administration from Iowa State University.

Outside of his work responsibilities, he has been involved in Habitat for Humanity, Boys and Girls Club, youth baseball leagues, and various parish activities.

Moore and his wife, Jan, who is also a college educator, have two children.

CAMPUS EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT

The University recently held the grand opening for The Fresh Grocer at The Shoppes at La Salle. Completing the shopping center, The Fresh Grocer marks the first time in 40 years that a grocery store has operated in the neighborhood. During the ribbon cutting, President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70 (above, right), was joined by Patrick J. Burns of The Fresh Grocer and local elected representatives and civic leaders.

Also this fall, faculty and students officially moved into Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology. The nearly 50-year-old science facility has been completely renovated and expanded, with state-of-the-art equipment and environmentally friendly features. La Salle's latest campus development was celebrated during the annual President's Reception.

Alums Honored for Lives of Service

La Salle's Alumni Association recognized two alumni, a longtime faculty member and a state representative, with its highest honors this fall. John J. Rooney, Ph.D., '46, received the John J. Finley, '24, Award, and State Rep. Dennis M. O'Brien, '82, received the Signum Fidei Medal.

The Finley Award honors a La Salle graduate who has exhibited outstanding leadership and service to the University. The award is named for John J. Finley, '24, a former Alumni Association President who was known to many as "Mr. La Salle."

Rooney, professor emeritus of psychology, began teaching at La Salle when he was still an undergraduate, taking over a chemistry class for part of the semester in the spring of 1946. Sixty-three years later, although he has retired from teaching, Rooney is still active as Director of the Master's Program in Clinical-Counseling Psychology, a position he has held since 1986. During his career, Rooney has also served as Director of the Counseling Center, two-time Chair of the Psychology Department, President of the Faculty Senate, a member of the Administrative Committee for the Graduate Program in Pastoral Counseling, and Director of Field Placement.

A licensed psychologist, Rooney earned a master's degree in psychology and a Ph.D. in counseling psychology from Temple University. He often speaks to PTA and civic groups, reviews books for the Philadelphia Inquirer, and is quoted on various topics for nationally circulated news articles. He has recently co-authored a book, Preparing for College: Practical Advice for Students and Their Families, with longtime friend and colleague John Reardon, Ed.D., '59.

The Signum Fidei Medal honors individuals or groups for their contributions to humanitarian principles and for upholding the mission and goals of La Salle University and the Christian Brothers. Signum Fidei, which means "sign of faith," is the motto of the Christian Brothers.

O'Brien's more than 30-year career has been marked by his steadfast support of police officers and firefighters and his dedication to providing children with disabilities the resources, education, and opportunities they need. A longtime advocate for people with autism spectrum disorders, O'Brien helped to create

Pennsylvania's Autism Task Force, and he worked to pass legislation that requires private insurers to offer coverage of services and treatments for autism up to age 21.

O'Brien was first elected to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives from the 169th District in 1976. Aside from a two-year absence to run for Congress in the early 1980s, O'Brien has served ever since. He was elected Speaker of the House in January 2007, a position he held for two years.

During his tenure as Speaker, O'Brien established the Speaker's Commission on Legislative Reform, guided the enactment of prison sentencing reform legislation, and advocated for openness in the House, symbolically leaving his office door open to all visitors.

Holroyd Hall Enhanced to Promote Interactive Learning

Creating a Center for Collaboration

BY WILLIAM A. PRICE, PH.D., PROFESSOR OF CHEMISTRY AND BIOCHEMISTRY

As an undergraduate institution, La Salle is committed to a liberal arts education, which assists students in liberating themselves from narrow interests, prejudices, and perspectives, and in learning to observe reality with precision, to judge events and opinions critically and independently, to think logically, to communicate effectively, and to sharpen aesthetic perception.

—From the La Salle University Mission Statement

TEN YEARS AGO, IF YOU HAD ASKED STUDENTS, faculty, and staff which campus building unified La Salle University and truly exemplified our mission, Holroyd Hall would never have made it onto the ballot. Is it possible for a science center to bring people together? Can it help to create and maintain a nurturing, supportive environment for students, faculty, and staff and foster a collective sense of our common mission? Oh, how times have changed.

Imagine walking into the brightly lit atrium of an innovative, environmentally friendly building where nearly 100 faculty, students, and administrators are gathered to ponder the question: "Are we risking playing God when we intervene in our biology?" The topic of discussion, posed on a 100-square-foot screen in the lobby, involves the potential benefits and pitfalls of manipulating, and, even synthesizing, genes for the purposes of accessing the world's most important malaria medicine. Imagine clusters of small round tables occupied by a diverse group of faculty members—from areas such as management, English, sociology, social work, criminal justice, economics, religion, chemistry, and Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT)—contemplating this question with University administrators and deans. Imagine undergraduate and graduate students who are actively engaged and integrated seamlessly into the discussions. In actuality, this particular event took place on Oct. 14, 2009, thanks to the new space created in the recently renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall. Although this community of critical thinkers varies week to week, a collection of the curious and concerned gathers every Wednesday at 3 p.m. to discuss various topics that tie to our collective mission. Did I mention the coffee and snacks?

This is just a small piece of Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology.

The building allows it to happen, and it is indeed bright, innovative, and green. We are all caretakers of this beautiful planet, and our collective concern for environmental issues can be seen throughout the building. This includes the retention of storm water that is accomplished with an 8,000-square-foot vegetative roof that sits atop the 31,000-square-foot addition, the solar photovoltaic arrays on the southern roof, and floor tiles throughout the building that are made from recycled materials.

Dominating the exterior of the building are rows of windows that bring in bright, natural light. Inside, windows in the hallways are more than just metaphors for the visibility of science, mathematics, and computer science. On the third floor, the chemistry faculty can look into their research labs through windows above their desks. ISBT's virtual control room allows passers-by to view how a dozen different students can collaborate by simultaneously working with data and projecting it on a common wall. The math and science faculty had a tremendous amount of input into the design of the building, which is why every floor has its own distinct personality. Students no longer have lounges; on the west side of the building on the second and third floors, the 16-foot wide hallway offers chairs, couches, and tables for any and all to meet, study, or snooze. This is no longer a lecture hall, but a learning and collaboration center of the highest caliber.

Just as manipulating genes represents a paradigm shift in how we will address future global health and nutrition needs, a shift no less dramatic in science and mathematics education is being realized at La Salle University as we settle into this stunning facility.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY MAGNETIFIED

Holroyd Hall Enhanced to Promote Interactive Learning

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

BACK WHEN THE NOTION OF AN UPDATED SCIENCE FACILITY was just a dream and not yet a reality, faculty and staff started building their wish lists. In addition to wanting more classroom and research space and upgraded technology and equipment, they agreed that a new building should create space for the entire campus community to gather, and that it should bring science out from behind closed doors and into the open.

Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology, reopened this fall after a 16-month-long renovation and expansion project. According to faculty and staff, the transformation of the nearly 50-year-old science building has fulfilled all of their wishes, with the added bonus of being a sustainable building.

"We now have one of the best-equipped undergraduate science facilities in the area," said William A. Price, Ph.D., professor of chemistry and biochemistry, who served as the faculty liaison for the project.

Classrooms, labs, lecture halls, and research spaces have been enlarged and transformed with state-of-the-art scientific and presentation technology that enhances the teaching and learning experience. In the light-filled atrium, groups gather to study, socialize, and share ideas. Windows throughout the building allow for glimpses into classrooms and labs where students are working with faculty to analyze rock samples, dissect specimens, conduct experiments, and solve problems. From nearly every room, there is a view of La Salle's campus, the surrounding neighborhood, or the Philadelphia skyline.

The 25th Annual President's Reception was held in Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology, to honor the University's generous benefactors. (Above) La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70 (center), with Hugh, '64, and Nancy Devlin. (Below) Gerry Ballough, Ph.D. (right), professor of biology, demonstrates the document camera in one of Holroyd Hall's lecture spaces to Frank, '55, and Peg Noonan.

"This building makes science visible," said Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences. "It has contributed to the intellectual environment on campus and has become a magnet for students and faculty from all departments."

The building is the culmination of what Keagy called "an extraordinarily collaborative adventure."

Price recalled meetings during which the architects presented faculty with blueprints and floor plans that showed the bare bones of the building. Faculty were then handed various-shaped blocks to represent different spaces and were told to map out how they wanted their departments' labs, classrooms, offices, and research spaces to appear on the blank plans. Each department's layout and available space in the building is unique.

"In a very real way, the faculty designed this building according to how the space would be used, down to the detail of where they wanted their teaching space in a classroom and where they wanted their office door to be located," Price said.

"It was a painstaking process because we insisted on full participation by the end user," said Brother Joseph Willard, F.S.C., '64, Executive Assistant to the President. Br. Joseph, along with Robert Kroh, Director of Facilities Management, oversaw every aspect of the project, from design to construction to grand reopening to post-opening troubleshooting. "This building was tailored to specific needs, because we were looking for what would make for the best teaching and learning environment."

The University worked with two architectural firms during the project: UJMN Architects for the design of the building itself and Nalls Architecture for the design of the specific classroom and lab spaces within.

Holroyd Hall is now a green building, both in the materials used to construct it as well as in the mechanical systems used to operate it. Once everyone had moved out of Holroyd Hall and temporarily relocated to St. Benilde Tower on West Campus for the 2008-09 academic year, the building was gutted, leaving behind only the steel-enforced concrete frame. When the structure was rebuilt, a new, energy-efficient heating, ventilation, and air-conditioning system was installed, along with tiles made of reprocessed materials, high-efficiency, low-heat-emitting light bulbs, and lighting systems that run on motion sensors to save money and energy. Solar panels are also scheduled to be installed on the roof, a project with which La Salle students will assist.

State-of-the-art technology can be found around every corner of the building. In lecture halls, each student desk holds a data port and power supply. Document cameras project crystal-clear images of professors' presentation materials.

"The instructional technology, such as document cameras, fully interactive presentation equipment, including whiteboards, and multimedia, enables the faculty to enhance their teaching methods and pedagogy," said Margaret McManus, Ph.D., Associate Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, who served as a liaison between faculty and administrators and the construction and architectural firms.

What, in your view, are the biggest improvements from "old" Holroyd to "new" Holroyd? Undoubtedly, the biggest improvement in the new building is space. The old building seemed shut off from the outside world with dark, narrow hallways, while the new building has huge glass windows that let everyone see the lobby from outside. It is more inviting, and it allows for a more enjoyable learning experience.

In addition, there are significant technological improvements. Personally, the greatest improvement is the computer lab reserved nearly exclusively for math majors. Unlike the one shared computer lab in the former building, the various labs for different groups of students have ensured that we no longer have to wait to use a computer.

Have your professors done anything differently in class now that you are in the new facility? The only ones more excited than the students about the changes to the new building have been the teachers. Nothing seems to make my teachers happier than a new toy, and there is no shortage of new technological gadgets for teachers to use. The SMART screens in math classrooms have been used as programmed calculators to do simple mathematical calculations so that everyone can see exactly how to solve a problem. In addition, the document camera, a more technologically advanced version of the projector, has been popular in all my classes.

How will studying in a state-of-the-art facility like Holroyd help with your future jobs or studies? The technological advancements have provided greater clarity to the ideas we are learning, as we can see, rather than merely listen to, a description of what we are studying.

In chemistry labs, glass-paneled, energy-efficient ventilation hoods make experiments safer and more visible. A media lab for the Digital Arts and Multimedia Design program has computers on wheeled carts that allow students to work collaboratively with each other and with their instructors.

Keagy said the building has drawn in people who may have been intimidated by the prospect of a building devoted to technology and the sciences.

"We've tried to open the building up, and in doing so we've changed the entire feel of this part of the campus," he said. "Where there once was a dark, imposing building, there is now a bright, welcoming place for the community to gather and learn from each other. I've heard people say that this is what they've always dreamed an academic, intellectual environment would be like at a university."

ELEANORA ROBINSON, '11
Psychology Major; Life Sciences Minor; Pre-Med Program

What, in your view, are the biggest improvements from "old" Holroyd to "new" Holroyd? The biggest improvements are the labs and the study areas. The lab experience has definitely improved because there is more space and new equipment. All of the new areas to study foster an atmosphere of learning.

What is your favorite feature of the new building? My favorite feature of the new building is the atrium. It makes the building welcoming and encourages a student presence in the building outside of the classroom setting. It's nice to have a place to rest before or in between classes. I think it's great that it's used for the Explorer Café on Wednesdays because it shows that Holroyd is a place of learning beyond the books, and the relaxed atmosphere welcomes an exchange of ideas and learning.

—BROTHER THOMAS MCPHILLIPS, F.S.C., PH.D., '72

CHRISTINE BERNARD, '11
Marketing/Digital Arts and Multimedia Design Major

What is your favorite feature of the new building? By far, my favorite feature of the new building is the lab space for Digital Arts and Multimedia Design (DArt). Since I am a DArt major, it is great that we now have our own department as well as several rooms dedicated to teaching. There also is a room with eight iMacs dedicated to DArt students. I am so happy that they added this because it is a place of collaboration and inspiration. The students have been talking about decorating the room with our work. I am so proud to say that I will be graduating from La Salle with a DArt degree based on the new Holroyd building and the equipment we use.

Have your professors done anything differently in class now that you are in the new facility? Yes! In my DArt color theory class, while the SEPTA strike was going on, we held interactive chats with the people who were unable to get to school that day. Also, the teacher's monitor is interactive, meaning they can draw on their screen and project it to us, which makes work easier to understand.

Have you had the opportunity to collaborate with professors on research projects outside of class, and has the new building facilitated this collaboration? I recently participated in the Vanguard Case Study Competition and my monitor was Peggy McCoe, assistant professor and Director of the master's program in Computer Information Science and Information Technology Leadership. She helped my group and myself go over the material using one of the new labs in Holroyd. Teams had to interpret what an organization needed to do to foster loyalty among employees and customers. We went on to win the competition!

Evolutionary biologist Ken Miller, Ph.D., of Brown University, spoke with La Salle students during the first Explorer Café.

A SPACE TO EXPLORE LA SALLE CONNECTIONS

BY LIZ VARGO

THE RECENT RENOVATIONS AT HOLROYD Hall provided more than a structural framework for classrooms, labs, and offices. It provided the framework for intellectual and inspiring discussions among a cross section of La Salle faculty, staff, and students.

That forum for discussion is known as The Explorer Connection. Julianna Gwiszcz, Program Director of The Explorer Connection, said the initiative meets specific elements of La Salle's new strategic plan, The Will to Excel, by giving members of the University community the opportunity to connect to one another across disciplines and reach out to the community beyond La Salle. Three subgroups of The Explorer Connection—the Celebration of Science, the Essential Question, and the Philadelphia Center—address core components of the strategic plan, including three key dimensions of the Christian Brothers' heritage: the context of our urban location, the practicality of linking theory and practice, and commitment to others.

In honor of the opening of Holroyd Hall, the Celebration of Science introduces creative scientific topics to faculty, staff, and students of all disciplines. The program has included discussions with prominent scientists, demonstrations involving both art and science, and discipline-specific seminars. In addition, the Explorer Café, held weekly in Holroyd's lobby, is a collaboration of the three prongs of The Explorer Connection that poses thoughtful topics for discussion on applications of science or economic justice.

"We're raising the intellectual culture of the campus," said Michael Prushan, Ph.D., '96, Frank P. Palopoli Endowed Professor and associate professor of chemistry and biochemistry. "Everyone can be involved in intellectual conversation that's not part of a class."

William A. Price, Ph.D., professor of chemistry and biochemistry, recently hosted an Explorer Café on ethical issues in science and genetics. His own interest in the topic spurred discussion among nearly 100 administrators, faculty, and students in attendance. "One reason The Explorer Café is able to occur is because we now have a facility that can host it," Price said. "The Café gives students and faculty of all disciplines the opportunity to sit together and get a conversation going that is stimulating."

The programs allow students of all disciplines to voice their opinions during intellectual conversation with their peers and professors, said biology major Matthew Levit, '10. "Students feel comfortable with the quiet setting and backdrop of the Holroyd atrium," he said. "I believe it is opening Holroyd to all students."

Explorer Café events also focus on the Essential Question. Organized by Marjorie Allen, Ph.D., Chair of the Department of Integrated Studies and associate professor of English, the Essential Question primarily focuses on economic justice. Topics—such as health-care reform, deregulation, and economic justice—revolve around La Salle's urban location and the social implications of working or learning in Philadelphia, Allen said.

"We're bringing people into a building who are not just science people," she said. "What we're doing is a unified thing. ... It's wonderful because we're including people of all different backgrounds."

The third component of The Explorer Connection, known as Philadelphia Center/City and Region Initiative, promotes student learning in the context of La Salle's urban location. A recent scavenger hunt in the city helped participating freshmen to work with their professors and learn about the history of Philadelphia through trivia. "We're using our urban location to our advantage and focusing on learning to enhance student achievement," said Preston Feden, Ed.D., professor of education. As Coordinator of the Using the City and Region as Instructional Resources initiative, Feden works with Heather McGee, Director of the Philadelphia Center.

The success of these programs is due, in large part, to the relaxed and open space at Holroyd Hall, Gwyszcz said. Each activity or presentation draws out new crowds of students, faculty, and staff. "We're creating a fervor for sciences and showing how we use science on a daily basis," she said. "The human experience is heavily shaped by science—there's no getting around it."

HENRY BART, PH.D.

Chair, Geology, Environmental Science, and Physics Department

What, in your view, is the most drastic change or improvement from "old" Holroyd to new? The biggest improvement is the layout of the building and the space we now have. We have separate rooms for our seismograph, our x-ray diffractometer, and our lapidary (rock preparation) lab, as well as labs for courses such as mineralogy, petrology, and introductory geology.

How will the renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall impact what you do in the classroom, your research, or your interaction with students? For the first time, we have a dedicated room for student research. We already have students working on projects and using the equipment. I'm sure the new building will give us additional opportunities to experiment with new pedagogical techniques.

What are students saying about the facility? Students love this place. They are thrilled that we went "first class" with the re-design of the building and included space for their research.

How do you think having a facility like Holroyd benefits the campus as a whole? I think having this facility will help to attract new students to La Salle, especially science students. In addition, lots of classes, other than science classes, are taught in Holroyd, so many students can enjoy the spacious, modern spaces and equipment we now have.

What, in your view, is the most drastic change or improvement from "old" Holroyd to new? The most striking improvement is simply the bright, airy aesthetics of the new building. The old building was an environment that one "had" to be in; now it is an environment that students and faculty enjoy being in—a destination of choice.

However, the benefits of the new building go far beyond cosmetic improvements. For students, the building offers the opportunity for collaboration and study. For science faculty, the building greatly increases the ability to work with students on independent research and to engage in scientific study using up-to-date technology. Lastly, the building is a benefit to all because the safety features have been enhanced from the former building.

How will the renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall impact what you do in the classroom, your research, or your interaction with students? I expect that the future will find an even greater sense of community between fellow students and between students and faculty. With students working together in the study areas and with open faculty office doors nearby, there are great opportunities for further enhancing the spirit of community, which was already a strong element of the Lasallian experience.

How do you think having a facility like Holroyd benefits the campus as a whole? For all that the new building does in terms of teaching and collaboration, perhaps the most important benefit offered by the new Holroyd building is what it means for the overall ambiance of the University. Both the financial commitment shown by the school and the successful implementation of the physical design of the building enhance a feeling that La Salle is moving forward, and that we, the faculty and students, will benefit by becoming involved in the ride.

"THE BUILDING GREATLY INCREASES THE ABILITY TO WORK WITH STUDENTS ON INDEPENDENT RESEARCH AND TO ENGAGE IN SCIENTIFIC STUDY USING UP-TO-DATE TECHNOLOGY."

—STUART GENTRY, PH.D.

What, in your view, are the biggest improvements from "old" Holroyd to "new" Holroyd? The "new" Holroyd building is filled with pure "awesome-ness," with state-of-the-art Mac computers, lab equipment, and the Virtual Control Room (VCR), which the current upper-level Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT) students are using. As ISBT majors, we also are fortunate to have our own labs, classrooms, and our very own computer lab.

Have your professors done anything differently in class now that you are in the new facility? The professors are certainly on the computer and using the new devices more often. For example, the document camera allows the professors to be very creative from projecting, to zooming, to doing scientific experiments right on the projector. In our first class, Bill Weaver, assistant professor of ISBT, showed us the magnitude of the digital zoom function by placing his hand on top of the projector and zooming so close that we could see the surface of his hair follicles.

How will studying in a state-of-the-art facility like Holroyd help with your future jobs or studies? The new building will definitely prepare me for my future career. Our new laboratories are filled with measurement instruments much like those used on the TV show CSI. Currently, in our Instrument and Measurement class, we are programming in National Instrument LabView, a computer language used by more than 25,000 companies from robotics to test cell measurement and control applications. With these features, I am confident and prepared to approach my future career and studies.

MELANIE DONOFRIO, M.S., '11

Information Technology Leadership Program

Career: Information Technology Lead/Business Relationship Manager, Johnson & Johnson

What is your favorite feature of the new building? I really like the SMART Interactive Classroom products, including SMART screens and SMART document cameras that allow professors and students to interact, share information, and collaborate in meaningful ways.

Have your professors done anything differently in class now that you are in the new facility? Peter Julian, who teaches IT management and planning, has been able to project directly from the textbook and other hard copy materials using the SMART document camera. He also regularly uses and encourages students to use the SMART screen for presentations and sharing electronic content with the class.

How will studying in a state-of-the-art facility like Holroyd help with your future jobs or studies? By gaining experience with using SMART collaboration solutions in a classroom setting at a state-of-the-art facility like Holroyd, I will be able to efficiently and effectively collaborate with colleagues all over the world, as these technologies become more readily available where I work.

"WITH THESE FEATURES, I AM CONFIDENT AND PREPARED TO APPROACH MY FUTURE CAREER AND STUDIES."

—BOBBY D. NGUYEN, '11

BR. THOMAS MCPHILLIPS, F.S.C., PH.D., '72

Professor, Biology

What, in your view, is the most drastic change or improvement from "old" Holroyd to new? I had not expected just how wonderful it would be to teach in the newly designed laboratory spaces. There is room to move around the labs and sight lines are excellent. Probably the best part is the ability to easily use PowerPoint and a document camera in the laboratory. It is now easy to illustrate small items or to perform a tricky technique on the document camera because the students can see what I am doing, as it is greatly magnified on the screen. Already, I sense that laboratory learning is greatly enhanced by the use of this equipment.

How will the renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall impact what you do in the classroom, your research, or your interaction with students? Everyone—students, faculty, and staff alike—seem to enjoy simply entering the building. Having a pleasant environment in which to learn only facilitates the learning process. Having the community spaces with tables, chairs, and lounge areas is already increasing interactions among the Holroyd inhabitants.

What is your favorite feature of the new building? My favorite feature is the audio/visual equipment in the larger lecture rooms. Having dual projectors gives the instructor enormous flexibility and opportunity, and this all is manipulated with great ease. It now seems that the limit to good teaching will be the instructor's imagination.

How do you think having a facility like Holroyd benefits the campus as a whole? The University Administration has been adamant about inviting people from all over campus into Holroyd.

Courses in English, psychology, religion, and several other disciplines are currently taught in Holroyd. The Explorer Café concept has further contributed to others on campus seeing Holroyd as their building, not necessarily the building for science and math people.

What, in your view, is the most drastic change or improvement from "old" Holroyd to new? Science and technology are visible to anyone in the building. There are windows into every lab and classroom, and I feel there is a need to show everyone—students, faculty, and staff—actively engaged in learning. The lighting brightens the atmosphere. In addition, modernizing the labs and enhancing safety were so necessary. The gathering areas are promoting conversation and collaboration. The use of environmentally friendly materials and the green roof also are reassuring.

How will the renovated and expanded Holroyd Hall impact what you do in the classroom, your research, or your interaction with students? The excitement this new environment has created is infectious. The opportunity for informal interaction between students and faculty is everywhere.

What are students saying about the facility? Awesome. The newer students think it's great. The students who remember the old building are amazed.

How do you think having a facility like Holroyd benefits the campus as a whole? One specific example of a campus-wide benefit is a gathering space for the Explorer Café. On Wednesday afternoons, you will find students, faculty, and staff enjoying nice refreshments, conversation, and discussion on science, technology, or economic justice topics. This is something we have been waiting for.

BUILDING A STRONG FOUNDATION

BY LIZ VARGO

BEFORE HE BECAME CHIEF OF THE Division of Neurosurgery at Hahnemann Hospital, Joseph Queenan, M.D., '87, sat in classrooms at Holroyd Hall, where La Salle provided him with the foundation of his education. "I think the most important thing in the educational process is building a strong foundation. La Salle built that strong foundation," he said.

Today, Queenan helps the University to continue building that strong foundation for future students. A biology major at La Salle, he recalled gathering with fellow students in Holroyd to assist each other with schoolwork. However, after 50 years of wear and tear, Holroyd needed a facelift, and Queenan was there to help.

Queenan was one of many La Salle alumni to contribute to the Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future initiative that funded major renovations and expansions at Holroyd Hall, now featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology.

His experiences at Holroyd inspired him to help the University and future science students.

"I had an excellent education," he said. "Prior to matriculating to a college, the medical schools in the area recommended that I go to La Salle because they thought it had the strongest pre-med program in the area."

Thanks to his strong educational foundation, Queenan knew La Salle had prepared him to face his peers in medical school. "There was a sense of collegiality—the idea that you can be successful without pushing the other guy down," he said. "It wasn't adversarial." The mutually respectful atmosphere, accessibility to professors, and quality education motivated him to contribute to La Salle.

Although the responsibilities of his position keeps him busy with patient care and overseeing divisional work, he remains connected to his alma mater and often visits with students. With the new space and state-of-the-art features at Holroyd, La Salle students will be more prepared for careers in science and technology than ever before, he said.

"Anything I can do to help out the institution," he said. "Working with the best technology is of utmost importance. The study of the sciences is certainly dynamic and always moving forward; we need to make sure that La Salle moves forward with it."

WHY WE GIVE BACK: LA SALLE ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

STUDENTS COME TO LA SALLE UNIVERSITY WITH AN INNATE sense of service that is fostered throughout their undergraduate experience by peers, faculty, and administrators. It makes sense, then, that this spirit of giving remains a central part of their lives as alumni.

"Giving back is a part of the total La Salle experience," said Mike Diccicco, '71, former President of La Salle's Alumni Association. Composed of more than 45,000 alumni located worldwide, the Alumni Association maintains a unique partnership with the University. The leadership of the Alumni Association recognizes the assistance and support they received while enrolled at La Salle, and they strive to create the same opportunities for current students.

"In the tradition of St. John Baptist de La Salle, the University has always been committed to—and successful in—serving those students who would not necessarily have had the opportunity for educational growth without support, notably, financial support," said Meg Kane, '03, President of the Alumni Association.

Approximately 40 percent of La Salle's students are first-time college attendees in their family, Kane noted. "The support that made it possible for so many of us to attend La Salle is still needed and makes a real difference in the lives of our current students," she said. "Our financial support of the University is not done so because of expectation, but rather because it is the right thing to do for our students and it gives life to the ongoing mission of St. La Salle."

The financial support provided to the University through the Alumni Association has steadily grown over the past several years. The Alumni Association has both expanded its financial support to broader areas of the University and also has increased its total amount of giving, Diccicco said.

The relationship between the Alumni Association and the University provides benefits to both entities, said Tom Leonard, '70, former Treasurer of the Alumni Association. "Whatever the program is, if it keeps our alums connected, then we can hopefully get them back on campus to see all the great things going on at La Salle."

According to Leonard, funding from the Alumni Association supports the President's Cup Golf Tournament, the Charter Dinner, the Alumni Association Awards Dinner, and several athletics initiatives, such as the recent redesign of the Hall of Athletes. The Alumni Association also was instrumental in establishing the fully endowed Brother Patrick Ellis Scholarship Fund for La Salle students.

One of the most significant contributions by the Alumni Association came during the recent Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative that helped to fund the renovation and expansion of Holroyd Hall, featuring the Hugh and Nancy Devlin Center for Science and Technology. "I think it was really a big step forward for the Alumni Association to make a decision to give to the Shoulder to Shoulder campaign," Diccicco said. "It's important that when the Alumni Association is doing something, we have a sense of togetherness. We are the body, the entity, of the alumni of the University."

"Whether you can be generous with a gift, your expertise, or simply your time, that generosity is truly appreciated."

—Meg Kane, '03

Creating this strong connection to the University has allowed the Alumni Association to better align itself with the strategic direction of the University, Kane said. "As the Alumni Association has made a greater effort to understand the goals of the University moving forward, we have been able to better support the areas of the University that are being viewed as growth areas," she said.

Involvement with the Alumni Association is not, however, limited to financial contributions, Kane said. The time, talent, and treasure of all La Salle alumni are appreciated and benefit current students. The more alumni become active in University programs, the more University activities are enhanced, Leonard added.

"I encourage our alumni to reconnect with the Alumni Association and La Salle," Kane said. "We need your support now more than ever, and whether you can be generous with a gift, your expertise, or simply your time, that generosity is truly appreciated."

The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863, and pays tribute to the generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle University the prominent institution that it is today.

Since its founding, La Salle has played a leadership role in Philadelphia as both an educational institution and a responsible corporate citizen. In recognition of the importance of leadership in our community, La Salle University recognizes an individual who has displayed outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, governmental, or religious communities with the presentation of La Salle University's Leadership Award.

Proceeds from the annual Charter Dinner and Leadership Award ceremony are utilized to enhance the University's Scholarship Fund, thereby benefiting future generations of La Salle students.

Thinking Green

An Alum Finds Success Through Sustainability

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

AFTER GRADUATING FROM LA SALLE WITH AN ACCOUNTING degree, Peter Dalton, '66, landed his first job, as a cost accountant for Johnson & Johnson, by engaging his interviewer in a conversation about English literature. A few years later, Dalton—the accountant with a passion for literature, the ham radio operator with an entrepreneurial spirit, the pro-development capitalist with a mission to save the planet—moved to California to join the digital world of Silicon Valley, where all of his interests found an outlet.

“My career happened accidentally,” he said. “I was a natural for Silicon Valley. I got out here, and it was an entrepreneur’s playground. There were no boundaries—your imagination was the only thing that kept you back.”

Dalton has made his primary career in restoring struggling companies to health, a process he perfected while working with dozens of companies over a 30-year period as CEO of Dalton Partners. Through one of his turnaround projects in the late 1970s, he was introduced to the concept of satellite television, and he had a brainstorm that led to the first satellite receiver on the market and the legalization of satellite television through an act of Congress. He has also served on the boards of directors of 36 public and private companies throughout his career.

Currently, Dalton is CEO of GlobalStar, a public company based in Milpitas, Calif. Dalton accepted the job in summer 2009 after serving on the board since 2004, and he now oversees an international company that provides mobile satellite voice and data services in 150 countries. The company’s satellite telephones facilitate communication in the vast areas of the world not served by cellular telephone technology, and they provide back-up service in emergency situations. For example, when Hurricane Katrina hit in 2005 and cellular service shut down, GlobalStar’s satellite phones were used by emergency personnel responding to the crisis.

Dalton has also been involved with GlobalStar’s first forays into consumer products. For example, one device, known as Spot, can be used to send a message to 911 along with GPS coordinates that allow the user to be located. Since Spot's launch, it has helped rescuers locate people stranded at sea or buried in avalanches.

Spot was born out of a realization that GlobalStar's technology could be used to save lives, Dalton said.

"We're a company interested in the return to our shareholders and in the return to mankind as well," he said.

Dalton's association with GlobalStar arose from his lifelong fascination with radio communications, and his involvement with environmental causes is also rooted in another childhood obsession: efficiency.

"I've always been bothered by waste," Dalton said. "But I was a capitalist—pro-development, not pro-saving the trees. For years, I was the only Republican involved in all of these green initiatives. I would go to the green conventions, and there I was looking like I'd just come out of prep school."

Dalton's first brush with "going green" came a decade ago, when his firm took over a real estate investment fund that was looking into environmentally friendly developments. Then, he took an interest in a Vermont company that had developed a new system for turning wastewater into fresh water.

"I said to myself, 'Holy smokes, this is what green is all about,'" he recalled.

Dalton started helping green-oriented companies raise money to bring their ideas to life. Along the way, he was introduced to ET Water Systems, which had invented an irrigation system for residential, commercial, and municipal use that conserves water by calculating precisely how much water plants and lawns need. Most sprinkler systems operate on a timer, soaking plants even during rainstorms, but ET Water's smart controller factors in soil and plant type and the humidity level to give lawns and plants just enough water.

The technology is already widely in use, including on Google's vast company campus, and, in 2010, a law will go into effect in California that will require smart controllers be installed in all new residential and commercial buildings. ET Water's smart controllers have earned the Wall Street Journal's Technology Innovation Award, the San Francisco Business Times's Green Product Award, and numerous other accolades.

From water, Dalton moved on to light. He co-founded Lightning Bug to develop new types of light-emitting diode (LED) light bulbs to replace traditional, inefficient incandescent bulbs. He also wanted to provide an alternative to compact fluorescent bulbs, which are more environmentally friendly than incandescent bulbs but have the drawbacks of containing mercury and not being dimmable. Lightning Bug patented a process to reduce the amount of heat emitted at the top and the bottom of a LED light bulb. The company has started selling LED spotlights and floodlights that employ this technology and is developing other types of bulbs for homes as well as for dentists' offices and operating rooms.

"The effect on the carbon footprint, on imports, and on oil consumption if the entire nation converted to LEDs is staggering," Dalton said.

"We're a company interested in the return to our shareholders and in the return to mankind as well."
—Peter Dalton, '66

Recognizing that global change can start on a smaller scale in one's own backyard, Dalton has also become involved with Green Town Los Altos, an initiative sponsored by the Packard Foundation that is educating residents of the city of Los Altos, Calif., on sustainability issues. Green Town Los Altos runs programs on sustainable land use and waste reduction and initiatives for residents to promote biking and for businesses to switch to more environmentally friendly materials.

Dalton's long career has twisted and turned through boardrooms, factories, Congress, and Wall Street as he has followed his passion for a variety of causes and ideas. Like the 12-year-old ham radio operator he once was, he likes to take the lid off, peer inside, and figure out how something works—and how it can work better.

"It's been fun for me, I'll tell you that," he said.

A Note From ...

BY LIZ VARGO

Speech-Language-Hearing Science

TEN YEARS AGO, ZANE WOLF, PH.D., DEAN OF THE SCHOOL of Nursing, wanted to expand the health science curriculum and recognized a need in the Delaware Valley that she knew could be addressed by La Salle University. The Greater Philadelphia area had only two programs that educated speech-language pathologists, and labor projections indicated that there would soon be a shortage of speech-language pathologists both locally and nationally.

To address this need, Wolf hired Barbara Amster, Ph.D., founding Director of the Speech-Language-Hearing Science (SLHS) Program, to develop the curriculum. After approvals from University committees and state agencies, the first students enrolled in the SLHS Program in 2000.

The program “started with very little but grew quickly,” Amster said. Evelyn Klein, Ph.D., associate professor of SLHS and the first faculty member to join Amster at La Salle, recalled teaching her first class of only seven students. Once it became a fully accredited program by the Council of Academic Accreditation of the American-Speech-Language-Hearing Association in 2003, the applications began pouring in. Site visitors called it “a model program for the nation.”

Cesar Ruiz, Assistant Professor of Speech-Language-Hearing Science, demonstrates speech analysis to a student.

“It’s not difficult to get interest in the program because there’s such a need,” Klein said. “It’s a great opportunity.”

Today, the program is accredited until 2016 and graduates more than 30 Master of Science students each year. As part of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences, the SLHS Program teaches both undergraduate and graduate students to address speech, cognitive communication, voice, and related disorders for patients ranging from newborns to the elderly.

Turning Classroom Theory into Real-World Practice

BY LIZ VARGO

Chiara deLeon, a graduate student in the Speech-Language-Hearing Science Program, works on her practicum project with a student at Clarke Pennsylvania School for the Deaf—Center for Oral Education

A PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN LA SALLE AND THE CLARKE Pennsylvania School for the Deaf—Center for Oral Education has created unique opportunities for students in the Speech-Language-Hearing Science (SLHS) Program at La Salle. With a dual appointment between La Salle and Clarke Pennsylvania, Joan Luckhurst, Ph.D., assistant professor of SLHS, has enabled numerous students to apply their skills as speech-language pathologists at Clarke.

All students at Clarke have cochlear implants or hearing aids, or both, that help them to learn to listen and develop spoken language. “When people think of hearing loss, they usually associate it with sign language, believing that children who are deaf are unable to learn to listen and speak. Because of this, intervention services that focus on development of listening and spoken language in young children with hearing loss are not common,” she said.

Clarke Pennsylvania is a private, nonprofit educational program that addresses the development of listening and spoken language for young children with hearing loss in

Faculty have “enjoyed watching the program grow over the years,” said Jennifer Kleinow, Ph.D., associate professor. SLHS now offers a traditional undergraduate degree, a two-year graduate program, and a five-year accelerated program that culminates with a graduate degree. In addition, La Salle’s SLHS faculty developed an online prerequisite-completion program called the Pre-Speech-Language Pathology (SLP) Program for students who have a bachelor’s degree in a different major but who want to pursue a master’s degree in speech-language pathology.

Since 2003, Jim Mancinelli, M.S., Clinical Coordinator for the SLHS Program, has developed affiliations with schools, hospitals, specialized schools, and long-term-care facilities as clinical education sites for SLHS graduate students’ practicum experiences. For example, the program has a partnership with the North Philadelphia Headstart Program in which SLHS students screen nearly 1,300 pre-school children for speech, language, and hearing disabilities. Students and graduates in other placements work with children with autism or an aging population with cognitive impairments. La Salle students in the SLHS Program are valued and often requested by the affiliated clinical sites, Mancinelli said.

“We have made a remarkable impact in the tri-state area,” he said.

Graduates leave La Salle well prepared and, for the past three years, have earned a 100 percent passing rate on the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association Certification exam, Amster said. The national average pass-rate for the exam is 75 percent.

Cesar Ruiz, SLP.D., an assistant professor who has taught in the program since 2002, noted that graduates have a 100 percent employment rate. “Our presence in the Delaware Valley has resonated throughout the school districts, home health agencies, nursing homes, and hospitals,” he said.

The program’s most recent milestone occurred in 2008, as the School of Nursing and Health Sciences relocated to La Salle’s newly acquired West Campus. Now located in St. Benilde Tower, the program has two clinics, a lab, classrooms with SMART technology, and new offices that will allow for future growth.

the Philadelphia region. Luckhurst said children at Clarke Pennsylvania deal with both the difficulty of developing listening and spoken language skills and stereotypes associated with the word “deaf.” The dedicated work of speech-language pathologists, teachers, psychologists, audiologists, parents, and the children themselves help to overcome the challenges associated with hearing loss.

“For these children, development of listening and spoken language allows full access to social interaction with their families, communities, and mainstream society in general,” Luckhurst said.

At Clarke, students are able to observe and complete practicum experiences or participate in research projects focused on listening and spoken language development in children with hearing loss. Advances in technology, changes in regulations for hearing screening, early identification, and changes in educational programming have helped children with hearing loss relate to their hearing peers.

“We know we can make a real difference in the quality of life for deaf and hard-of-hearing children and their families.”

—Joan Luckhurst, Ph.D.

“This means that greater numbers of children with hearing loss are being mainstreamed in their local schools, attending classes with their hearing peers, and accessing the general curriculum, which, in turn, means that greater numbers have the potential to graduate from high school, go on to college, and choose from a variety of careers,” Luckhurst said.

For SLHS graduates, the experiences at Clarke Pennsylvania prepare them to work in schools or clinics with deaf and hard-of-hearing children. “They are not only able to provide services, but are also able to educate colleagues in the methods and techniques for the development of listening and spoken language in children with hearing loss,” Luckhurst said. “We know we can make a real difference in the quality of life for deaf and hard-of-hearing children and their families.”

Boosting the Explorers

BY ALICIA PENNACCHIA, '07, EXPLORER CLUB VICE-PRESIDENT OF COMMUNICATION

A NEW AND IMPROVED ACADEMIC SUPPORT CENTER, refurbished locker rooms, a stadium seated media room, funding for stronger recruitment, renovated weight and training rooms, softball field enhancements, a new Hall of Athletes, a resurfaced track, and increased travel opportunities—all of these efforts have been supported and funded in full or in part by La Salle University's booster organization, the Explorer Club.

Though teams are provided with annual operating budgets and all students, including student-athletes, benefit from financial assistance made possible by alumni support of the University's Annual Fund, coaches also rely on the additional donations of loyal alumni and friends to the Explorer Club. According to men's basketball Head Coach John Giannini, Ph.D., "The financial and emotional support of the Explorer Club is very important to our program. The Club provides the enthusiasm and financial means that are necessary ingredients for a successful program."

The Explorer Club, which now boasts nearly 1,000 members, was started in 1996 as a way to organize fundraising efforts for the entire La Salle intercollegiate athletics program. It began to formalize its structure in 1997 when Tom Brennan, Ed.D., became Athletic Director. "When I arrived at La Salle, the notion of an Explorer Club had just been established," Brennan said. "It was a startup that quickly took shape as alumni and friends of athletics got involved."

The Explorer Club has become a vital organization for all La Salle athletic teams.

A Board of Directors and an Executive Committee were formed with John Carabello, DMD, '62, serving as first Explorer Club President. Jim McManus, '69, and Ken Mancini, '69, have followed Carabello as presidents and the Athletic Department has benefitted greatly from all of their work.

Soon after a structure was established, the Explorer Club introduced formal activity in an effort to garner support and raise funds on a continuing basis, closely coordinating activity with the University's Development Office. The Spring Membership Drive and Fall Reception Auction continue to grow and expand. In fact, on Sept. 26, 2009, another successful auction was held in the Tom Gola Arena with more than 250 people in attendance.

The Explorer Club has become a vital organization for all La Salle athletic teams while providing donors with the opportunity to designate support for a specific sport. "The Explorer Club has the needs of all student athletes and teams in mind and continuously raises funds for all programs," Brennan said.

Members of the Explorer Club have also become involved in the life of La Salle Athletics. Explorer Club representatives have participated in major planning initiatives for Athletics. The Explorer Club is also represented on the University Athletics Committee, an NCAA committee that provides insight and recommendations regarding the Athletics program to both the Athletic Director and the University President.

The Explorer Club is constantly working to provide the best possible opportunities for student-athletes and relies heavily on the dedication of the alumni and friends that constitute its membership. "Our contributions to a vibrant and successful athletic program can enrich the campus experiences of student-athletes and student-fans alike, all while enhancing the visibility and reputation of the University as a whole," Mancini said.

25 Years Later: La Salle's University Status and Belfield Acquisition

BY MARIAN BUTCHER, M.A. '08

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, LA SALLE TOOK TWO BIG STEPS forward into its future. On May 24, 1984, La Salle College officially became La Salle University with a press conference attended by then-Pennsylvania Gov. Dick Thornburgh. Also that year, La Salle purchased the remaining eight acres of the Belfield Estate, which included the Peale House, a National Historic Landmark that is now home to the President's Office.

The move from College to University meant more than just changing the letterhead. Brother Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., then La Salle's President, said at the time that the designation as a University better reflected the institution's variety of undergraduate and graduate program offerings, its relationship to the community, the qualifications of faculty, and the size of the student body. As La Salle evolved, though, Br. Patrick said, its foundation remained unchanged.

"As our destiny is on our own hands, there is every reason to be confident that we can retain and enhance our emphasis on the excellent teaching of undergraduates and on the relaxed accessibility of faculty and administrators to students," Br. Patrick said at the press conference.

University status came at the end of a long process that included a visit by an evaluation team to analyze La Salle's academic program. State Education Secretary Robert C. Wilburn told The Philadelphia Inquirer that the team examined "the overall educational quality, the comprehensiveness of the programs, and, among other things, we take a look at what a college's graduates do."

"In the case of La Salle, there is a very outstanding record of achievements by graduates, their acceptance and performance in graduate and professional schools, and their success," Wilburn said.

In an essay published in La Salle Magazine in summer 1984, Br. Patrick observed that La Salle was particularly well-matched with the state's criteria for University designation in the area of service to the community, which he noted took the form of academic programs, workshops, continuing education initiatives, and special events for the community, in addition to volunteer work by students, faculty, and staff.

"What we clearly have, then, is a university presence at the point where Germantown, Logan, and Olney meet, having an impact on Philadelphia itself," Br. Patrick wrote. "Much more, then, than the change of one word in a name is at stake here. New energy, new impetus, renewed dedication to old truths, are now on our agenda."

The acquisition of the remaining eight acres of the Belfield Estate occurred with less fanfare, but it still made a significant impact. La Salle had acquired most of the Belfield Estate over the years, starting in 1926, when the Christian Brothers bought the land for La Salle's original main campus from descendants of William Logan Fisher, who had purchased the property in 1826 as a gift for his daughter Sarah when she married William Wister. But the Peale House, where renowned artist Charles Willson Peale lived and produced many of his most famous works from 1810 to 1821, remained a private residence until 1984.

In 1986, the eight-acre plot officially became integrated into campus when renovations and additions were completed. Six tennis courts were built; 80 new parking spaces were added; the area was landscaped; and, perhaps most significantly, the Peale House was renovated into office space for the President and other administrators. The studio where Peale produced much of his work became the President's Reception Room.

Peter Krok's nearly 60 poems include narrations of incidents and characters in particular urban corners—some of them specifically identified, others easily applicable to any city or any small town—and the reader feels a sense of recognition. What Krok does in this collection is to find the supremely lyrical in the commonplace.

Peter Krok, '69, graduated from La Salle with a bachelor's degree in history. Born in West Berlin, Germany, Krok came to the United States during the Berlin Air Lift. He is editor of the Schuylkill Valley Journal and is Humanities Director of the Manayunk Art Center, where he coordinates a literary series. This fall, La Salle's Alumni Association bestowed its highest honors on two alumni.

John J. Rooney, Ph.D., '46, professor emeritus of psychology, received the John J. Finley, '24, Award. Rooney has spent 63 years at La Salle, currently serving as Director of the Master's Program in Clinical-Counseling Psychology.

"Jack values our students and our program," said Donna Tonrey, Psy.D., '02, Director of the Marriage and Family Therapy Program and former student of Rooney's. "He knows that what happens in our program reaches out beyond the walls of La Salle and benefits our community. He is a man of integrity, vitality, expertise, knowledge, creativity, and wisdom."

State Rep. Dennis M. O'Brien, '82, received the Signum Fidei Medal. For more than 30 years, he has served as the State Representative for the 169th District. He has been known for his support of police officers and firefighters and his commitment to the health and welfare of children, particularly children with autism spectrum disorder.

"Denny O'Brien has spent an entire career in service to others," said Edward Turzanski, '81, La Salle's Counsel to the President for Government and Community Relations. "As we reflect on his record of helping those in need, we are inspired to action ourselves."

Longo Named Second Palopoli Professor

This year's recipient of the Palopoli Professorship is Stephen Longo, Ph.D., a professor with a joint appointment in physics and computer science. Created in recognition of Frank P. Palopoli's scientific achievements by his sons, Frank C. Palopoli, '69, and John J. Palopoli, M.D., '70, the professorship honors faculty who embrace scientific research in education.

"Steve Longo's academic background is rooted in physics and mathematics, but his passion for learning has led him to develop additional areas of expertise in a wide range of computer technology areas," said Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences. "Steve is a model faculty member who understands and incorporates examples of the 'theory-practice' Explore theme from our University strategic plan into his teaching and his mentorship of colleagues."

Longo's work primarily focuses on using new technology in computing. Initially hired in the former Physics Department at La Salle in 1971, Longo became the University's first Director of Computing in the 1980s. Currently, he is on sabbatical to design a programming course for an online master's degree in computer science. He also is working on a set of online tutorials that will help students prepare for physics courses by strengthening their mathematics skills.

The three-year professorship supports research-related costs. Longo will likely use the funds from the professorship for equipment or student assistance involving his work on new technology.

Each year, a new faculty member is named Palopoli Professor as determined by the Dean of Arts and Sciences and chairs of the science departments. The inaugural award was presented to Michael Prushan, Ph.D., '96, associate professor of chemistry and biochemistry, who will remain a Palopoli Professor for two more years.

Faculty Honored for Their Achievements

DAINTON RECEIVES UNIVERSITY'S SCHOLARSHIP AWARD

Marianne Dainton, Ph.D., professor of communication and Director of the Graduate Program in Professional Communication, received the 2009 Faculty Distinguished Scholarship Award for her research on relationship maintenance in marriage, dating relationships, and long-distance relationships.

"I find human beings endlessly fascinating, and we really know very little about the everyday, mundane things that sustain relationships," she said.

In presenting the Scholarship Award, La Salle Provost Richard Nigro, Ph.D., said Dainton "has a long-term, planned, and purposeful record of scholarship in her primary research area of relationship maintenance and has been noted as one of the six recognized scholars in the area of relational maintenance. She regularly collaborates with colleagues in her research endeavors and has also mentored student researchers with some of these collaborations, having resulted in publication or conference presentations."

A member of the La Salle faculty since 1996, Dainton is the co-editor of two books, one on relationship maintenance between couples and the other a textbook about communication. She also has had numerous articles published in professional journals.

MSHOMBA NAMED DISTINGUISHED LASALLIAN EDUCATOR

Economics professor Richard Mshomba, Ph.D., '85, has been named the 2009 recipient of the University's Distinguished Lasallian Educator Award, which honors members of the La Salle community who are committed to Lasallian priorities and traditions.

As this year's recipient, Mshomba said he was humbled. "You have already given me so much," he said.

"La Salle along with the Christian Brothers have given me an education, a job—what more can you give me?"

Born and raised in Tanzania, East Africa, the thought of becoming a university professor was beyond his wildest dreams. At the age of 27, Mshomba came to the U.S. to attend La Salle on a full scholarship. He graduated maxima cum laude in three years with a double major in economics and philosophy.

As he presented the award to Mshomba, University President Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, said, "During his time at La Salle, he has established himself as an outstanding teacher and an accomplished scholar, one with genuine concern for students and for the larger world in which they will live. His amazing life journey has taken many unpredictable turns, arriving, finally, as a member of a university faculty."

He also established the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, carrying on La Salle's longstanding tradition of providing educational opportunities for adult learners.

"I believe that Rich's academic background and administrative experience, especially in curricular evaluation and development, will be valuable for the University's strategic initiative to grow the Honors Program," said La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C.,

Ph.D., '70. "I trust that Rich will continue the tradition of excellence established by (Honors Program founder) John Grady and continued the last two years by (English Professor) Jim Butler."

A painting of St. Benilde Romançon, F.S.C., 1805–1862, completed by Brother Richard Bussina, F.S.C., head of the Art Department at West Catholic High School, was unveiled this summer in the atrium of St. Benilde Hall on West Campus at La Salle. [SERVING THOSE WHO SERVE THE CITY]

Nearly 300 police officers as well as La Salle University security officers gathered for the annual pre-Thanksgiving feast at the 35th Police District Headquarters this fall. The La Salle Ambassadors have been hosting this event for the past 10 years, and nearly 30 Ambassadors volunteered this year to show appreciation for the work of local police officers and firefighters. Fresh Grocer, the neighborhood's new supermarket, also contributed to the annual tradition through donations.

Loftus Receives IT Leadership Award

John Loftus, a Partner with Internet Capital Group (ICG) in Wayne, Pa., received La Salle's Information Technology Leadership Award for his contributions to the field and for his dedication to helping students who are studying computer science and related areas.

Loftus' father, who was an electrical engineer at General Electric (GE) for 31 years, inspired his work in technology. "While I didn't know exactly what career I wanted, I anticipated that studying technology would prepare me for any career choice," he said. "I really knew I made the right choice when I got out of school and began solving real problems with software."

ICG acquires and builds Internet-related companies that help traditional industries and markets become more efficient. Loftus says his role with ICG is to "source companies with a technological competitive advantage, a large market opportunity for their product or service, and a strong management team that would benefit from ICG as a partner to help them grow."

Loftus has worked at GE, PECO Energy, WPL Laboratories, Breakaway Solutions, Gestalt LLC, and Safeguard Scientifics, and he has more than 20 years of experience in executive management, entrepreneurship, and technology leadership.

"John Loftus is very generous with his time and energy," said Margaret McCoe, assistant professor and Director of the master's programs in Computer Information Science and Information Technology Leadership. "His endless contributions to our students, to La Salle, and to this discipline demonstrate why he is so deserving of this award."

Honorary Degrees Awarded to Lewis and Prince

During Honors Convocation, La Salle bestowed Honorary Degrees upon Edward T. Lewis, Ph.D., President and CEO of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, and Sue Ann Price, Ph.D., Founding Director and Curator of the American Philosophical Society Museum.

Lewis spent two years as Assistant Chair of the English Department at the University of Puerto Rico, then became Associate Dean at the Graduate School of Business at Cornell. In 1983, he was named President of St. Mary's College of Maryland. During his 13-year tenure, he helped the college evolve into one of the nation's finest liberal arts colleges.

In 2007, Lewis was chosen as President and Chief Executive Officer of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. He led the Academy to implement several new programs, initiate community collaborations, and orchestrate a successful capital campaign.

In presenting the award, La Salle University President Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, said, "You are applying your talents and dedication to a historical and cultural gem in the city of Philadelphia—The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. The traditions of the Academy, not only as a museum and school, but also as the provider of stimulating and valuable public programs, are in good hands."

The Academy is linked to La Salle through Charles Wilson Peale, one of the Academy's founders. Peale, a colonial American artist, inventor, museum keeper, naturalist, and polymath, lived at the Belfield Estate, which is now part of La Salle's campus, in the early 19th century.

Prince has spent her career focused on the world of art as a fiber artist, a fiber-arts instructor, a freelance arts writer, and an art critic for The Seattle Times. Previously, she was Midwest Regional Director for the Archives of American Art of the Smithsonian Institute and served as Director of Public Relations for the National Portrait Gallery of the Smithsonian Institute. She was an instructor at Rosemont College and a lecturer at the Philadelphia Museum of Art and the University of Pennsylvania.

Since 2000, Prince has served as Director and Curator of the American Philosophical Society Museum. The Society, which dates to 1743, is also connected to La Salle through Peale. It housed Peale's natural history museum until 1811, when he left his museum to come to Belfield. Prince was appointed to build "a museum from scratch" two centuries after Peale's museum there closed. Br. Michael stated that Prince's "understanding of the value of museums and creativity to link science, history, and art serve as a role model to the University's intentions to do the same."

At La Salle, Brogan taught courses on political theory (both classical and modern), constitutional law, American politics, and American federalism, as well as literature courses, particularly a course on Tolkien in the University's Honors Program.

According to James Butler, Ph.D., '67, an associate professor of English and past Director of the Honors Program, Brogan had "a somewhat unusual take" on the Tolkien saga, discussing the political economy and political science aspects of it. "It was very popular with students," Butler said.

"He was an outstanding teacher," said Michael Dillon, Ph.D., Chair of the Political Science Department, who taught Brogan as an undergraduate. "In the exit interviews I do with seniors, almost everyone says that they learned so much about writing and research from (Brogan's) senior seminar. They say it was the hardest course they took, but it was the most valuable to them."

In addition to his wife, Marylou, Brogan is survived by three children, Michelle, John, and Matthew.

In Memoriam: Ralph W. Howard, '60

Ralph Howard, the first Director of La Salle's News Bureau and Editor of La Salle Magazine, died April 19, 2009, from complications of lung disease. He was 76.

Howard, who grew up in North Philadelphia, joined the U.S. Navy in 1952. He developed a desire to attend college after writing and editing for his ship's newsletter. He attended La Salle after he left the service and was the first in his family to graduate, earning a bachelor's degree in English.

After graduating, La Salle hired Howard as its first Director of the News Bureau in 1960. He later became Editor of La Salle's alumni magazine and served in that position until 1969. As Editor, Howard received several awards, including the 21st Annual Journalism Award of the La Salle Collegian and the annual Newsweek magazine award for excellence in public affairs reporting.

After leaving La Salle, Howard was named Editor of Temple University's alumni magazine. He left briefly for a marketing position with the former IVB bank, then returned to Temple to work in various communication positions.

Friends and family knew Howard as a man with an unbridled curiosity and eclectic interests in science, history, and the arts. He encouraged higher education as the key to upward mobility.

Howard's wife of 55 years, Evelyn, died in 2007. He is survived by one son, three daughters, including Mary Lou Gies, MSN, R.N., Coordinator of La Salle's Nursing Learning Resource Center, six grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

CELEBRATING FAMILY WEEKEND, HOMECOMING, AND REUNION

This fall, La Salle welcomed alumni, friends, and families to campus for three big events.

More than 300 families attended various activities during Family Weekend in October. Visitors had the opportunity to attend a Friday night Phillies game or enjoy hypnotist Ronny Romm in the Dan Rodden Theatre. Saturday included tours of Philadelphia and Valley Forge, lunch on La Salle's quad, athletics, entertainment, and a Night in Vegas. The weekend closed on Sunday with a liturgy in the chapel, brunch with La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, and Honors Convocation.

In November, for the first time at La Salle, hundreds of alumni returned to Main Campus to kick off the Explorer basketball season during Homecoming weekend. The result was a success—approximately 1,150 people attended various events over Homecoming Weekend and the La Salle Explorers edged the Hampton Pirates, 83–80.

Prior to the game, alumni were invited to attend a party with men's basketball Head Coach John Giannini, Ph.D., and Meg Kane, '03, President of La Salle's Alumni Association. Guests enjoyed music from the Matt Gauss, '04, Band, and Kidsfest offered children the opportunity to accessorize a Build-an-Explorer Bear.

In addition, several celebrations were held around the Philadelphia area for the classes of '84, '89, '94, '99, and '04 during Fall Reunion.
